EPIZOOTIC.

"Gaily the cavalier mounts in the morning, Dashes the spurs in the sleek, glossy side, Prestigious, pitying, railroad trainings riding, Swift on his thoroughbred charger he'll ride.

And here comes an elegant equipage, drawn by The very best pedigree span in the town, Trace back your blood and you'll find you have gone by All trace of the owner's—and his comes far down.

What's this? They are coughing! And what is that that flows From their nostrils, red nostrilled old-horse's nose?

"Oh, whence comes it? Why is it? Wherefore, and what is it?
Smiling the lowly, nor sparing the high:
Never to the hindmost, or the sheep-Norse to cease till the horses all die?
What shall we do for it? What is the cause?
Cider, warm blankets, or plenty of rest?"

"Low is the head that so proudly was rearing, And drooping the neck that was curved in his pride, Dimmed the fierce eye, and dented the forehead, Paint throbs the once wildly pulsed purple tide, Shakes down his bedding; spread the clean straw; Mix a draught; he no longer can draw."

"Nobly he tolled on the route to East Boston, Or whirled the swift car o'er the Roxbury line.
Strike now the car bell, its note will be lost on The cars that are chilled, and give back no sign.
Dissonant now marked him; his powers are fled; Care for him kindly—he yet is not dead."

"Mix the bran meal! If you ever would use it, Stir it as never you stirred it before!
We learn to esteem him in fearing to lose him—Bring the hot water, and steam him some more!
There! He is better now; sponge off the lip—Harness him up again. Get down the whip."

AFTER A WATCH.

In search of my watch, Aug. 21. Hearing in New Haven that "time rolls on," I thought perhaps that my watch that was stolen from me on the Blucher street cars might have rolled 38 miles from Hartford to New Haven, and so I rolled up to Hartford, and after drinking two mugs of pork and molasses, I gazed a gaze upon Hartford. Hartford is bounded on the north by Hartford, on the south by Hartford, on the east by Hartford, and on the west by Hartford. Hartford folks think if it wasn't for a steamboat connecting Hartford with New York, New York wouldn't amount to a tin cup. Hartford owns Bain's Bay, the Straits of Gibraltar, the Pacific Ocean, and several other water lots, and she owns the land adjoining, and holds a first mortgage on the equator, and rents the rigid and torrid zone at so much a zone.

The first man who ever lived in Hartford was a fort the Dutch built in 1633, and the oldest living inhabitant. The Dutch ascended the Connecticut river in flat-bottom boats until it got aground and then they landed at Suckeggs, (Indian name), Hartford was then Suckeggs, and its citizens are suckeggs to this day. There is a State House in Hartford and a stage road to Middletown, and a cold molasses passage there. When the dew is heavy the river is navigable for sloops of twenty tons and upward weight. The people are spruce and as though they were weaned on one cow's milk, and they are more tidy than the people of any other town.

Henry. The cook where I stop has Auburn hair. She fell in love with me and sent me a lock of hair beautifully enclosed in bash.

I stepped into a church. I hadn't my good clothes on, so the sexton gave me a best seat in the house, that is, in case of fire it was the best seat in the house, because it was next to the door. A divine was preaching. He wears a shirt collar so high that his wife has to let his dinner down with a fish line. He shouted, "The Pilgrim Fathers, where are they?" three times and those that follow sat and couldn't tell him where the Pilgrim Fathers are one time. I was a stranger and I would have yelled out, "All dead, every damned one of 'em." I got disgusted and left.

When I first gazed upon the Connecticut river I was struck with fear. It is a fresh stream, but its worth of salt would make it all right to grow crabs. I met a regular old flat-foot Puritan down by the river. He looked as though he might have come over in the May Flower, or a barrel of flour, and he told me how the Connecticut river was started. He called it A FRIEND.

Away up in New Hampshire, a long time since, dwelt a maiden squaw—When she got over squawking and growled up, she was as graceful as an oyster, and her steps were as elastic as a grandfurther shoe. Her husband, like the doves of old in the morning sunlight; her breath was like the perfume of forest flowers, and her nose was like a figure four on a five engine.
Her hair was black as an hour after midnight, and her voice was like the music of raindrops on a tin roof. Her husband could begin to babble as sweetly as she could bubble, and her name was Wontia (one eater). She was reared among shagbarks and dogbarks. Her arithmetic was the golden-headed studs that hold up the blue sky, and her geography was the hills and dale, the hills and the river. She could not have spent Constantinople if you had given her a whole eustard pie to do so.
Reuben Penn was a mighty hunter and when far from home he wore furs. He couldn't spell Constantinople either. Thus Reuben and Wontia married, and they were hitched. He was skilled in trapping deer and he trapped that deer, and where Reub sighed for his deer, the winds have sighed ever since. He married Wontia and Won-tia married Reub.

With a three-legged camp stool, a real settle, and a second hand sawing, they went to housekeeping and were as happy as the aboriginal father-in-law led the great spirit, whiskey, and one day Wontia's pop got corned; then he was pop corned, and he took a repeating Thomas-hawk and combated Reub's hair with it, and Reub was going to shoot Reub, but he was shot, and the rears rolled down into the valley and grew into a flood that rolled in a mighty valley that all the calves in the country could not bind, onward to the home of the lobster and the clam, the oyster and the crab. And Wontia died and was grieved and she died and she died and she died became a stream; three years did it all.
Reub left one progeny, it was a he one, and they gave him no progeny in his childhood, and he grew to be a mighty warrior, and went agrounding, shooting cents and cents, and he was shot, and he was gathered to his grandmothers. And to this day where Reuben aimed to Wontia grows the hemlock, and where Wontia aimed for Reuben grows the pine tree, and all is lovely and the goose hangs high.
Wontia is buried in her father's, Wontia to her mother, and progeny to his grandmother. Finis.

I thanked the Puritan for his legend, and told him if he ever came to New York he must call at the corner of Ann and West thirty-second street with his family and take a walk with me, and he said he would.

I wouldn't advise people in moderate circumstances to visit Hartford, because there are only six shillings to the dollar there and in New York there are eight. Up there, if a fellow has a dollar, he can buy a whole hog, while in New York he can spend six shillings and have a quarter left.

AN EPISODE OF THE WAR.—The familiar aphorism that truth is stranger than fiction, is not a mere fancy, but a fact. It is just now deeply interested in the story of a war episode, which shows how romances sometimes creep into the events of real life. Early in the war, a soldier named Downey, a young man and a soldier, was sent to the front with a regiment of the 5th Maine. He was captured by the enemy, and was sent to a prison camp. He was there for several months, and during that time he was treated with great cruelty. He was starved, and he was beaten, and he was tortured in every way possible. He was almost dead when he was rescued by the British army. He was then sent to a hospital, and he was there for several months. He was then sent to a prison camp again, and he was there for several months more. He was then sent to a hospital again, and he was there for several months more.
He was then sent to a prison camp again, and he was there for several months more. He was then sent to a hospital again, and he was there for several months more. He was then sent to a prison camp again, and he was there for several months more.
He was then sent to a hospital again, and he was there for several months more. He was then sent to a prison camp again, and he was there for
sent to a hospital again, and he was
