Eating Extraordinary-Champion Eatist of the Country.

First and last, in books and papers, much has been written about the enormous quantity of food that men have been able to consume at a meal, either to gratify an unnatural or inordinate appetite; or, making a game-pit of their stomachs, they have undertaken to cat pound after pound of meat and measure after measure of other food, against time or another man's purse -but all for the sake of gain, or a sort of notoriety that is always attached to chamsionship matters. It is nothing of this and that this paragraph has to deal with, but, as in making record of any legitimate news item, it is written as so much local news, and though almost inercelible, the writer gives it on the testimony of a number of as credible witnesses as can be found in Postou, and after a careful investigation of the whole case himself. Not more than a good block from the corner of West and Washington streets, says the Boston Herald there is a young man, twenty-one years of age, weighing about 120 pounds, apparentsick), steady and industrious, working every day at his trade (and he does a good business), with a large circle of friend and but little exercise, aside from what he gets generous rivalry for the palm of superior oil wells. at his work, his habits being of a sedentary excellence. character. A Smaller Vote and Greater Majority.

The election returns begin to present a curious subject for political speculation. It seems likely to turn out that Gen. Grant, totwithstanding his overwhelming majorully counted in a Presidential election, is of course excluded from the comparison.
