

The Loves of the Bouncers.

A VERY PATHETIC TALE. Samuel Bouncer was a robust young butcher, who wore a hat with a top...

Samuel was in love. And with a girl, while yet in the prime of his manhood, with all the grace of youth upon him...

Such was the ethereal creature to whom Samuel Bouncer had given his heart. I have said she weighed one hundred and seventy-five pounds...

"Yes, I've got on my new gored dress. How do you like it, Sammie?" "Ah! beautiful! beautiful! And my dress, too, is gored," said Sammie...

"But, Sammie, did I not reveal my vow always to be true? The fact that I possess your affection is one of my chief delights...

"Believe me, Sallie, I steel myself against such syrens. No other woman shall purloin my heart from you; I listen to no tale of love from other lips than yours...

"I cannot hide my love. I will marry you, and you alone. I'll wear you next my heart as I do this piece of ribbon..."

"Samuel, I derive hope and consolation from your words. Kiss me, and mind you don't act as if you were sneaking either 'em a straw, and were pressed for time..."

"Just who, ever you please, Sallie, I live for you alone. If you should cast me off I would cease to be a liver. I'd blow my brains out with a marrow bone..."

Thus did the two young persons sit and converse in tender accents, as the soft moon flung her radiance o'er the landscape...

And so they were married at last, and down the pathway of life, strewn with flowers, as it were, the two loving hearts bounded joyously...

Matrimonial Eccentricities. TEN DOLLARS SPOIL ONE MARRIAGE, BUT CAUSE ANOTHER.

John Bartlett and Caroline Hill, living at Turner, on the Oregon and California railroad, Oregon, had loved each other long and well...

His consolation was, odd as it may seem, his affianced sister Betsey. She assured him that Caroline would be back and marry him...

When he stepped aboard the train on which his Caroline came, and presented himself to escort her off, she got her back up, and held her head up, and turned her nose up...

Without following their fortunes further, let us turn our attention to Miss Carrie. Proceeding to Eugene, she brought up with a young man whose name and lot she, on second thought, preferred rather than to become a Bartlett.

A Wonderful Story. It will be remembered that Mr. Weston, who resided in the northern part of this county, was lost in the great snow of last month while on his way home from the woods where he had been for some time.

Although diligent search has been made, no trace of the missing has yet been discovered. A strange story, however, is connected with the sad affair, which renders the case unusually interesting to all.

From the account of Mr. Weston, given by Maj. E. P. Evans, State Commissioner, the relief of the sufferers by the storm on Friday morning, after the storm had subsided, as she lay in the snow awaiting the return of her husband, having used all the wood he had prepared for leaving—the hearth had become so cold that she was unable to keep the house.

Weston that may seem incredible to those unacquainted with the case. The man, he says that, when the storm, he carried a forkful of hay to the stable, and as he was about to enter the door, distinctly saw the missing man, dressed as usual, with a soldier's uniform, standing in the path, about twenty feet from the stable door.

Mr. Cosper is a perfectly reliable and one unlikely to have his statements constantly carried with it. His acquaintance such weight that since he has been mostly confined to the above named. The depth of the snow, however, in the many places, renders it extremely doubtful if it will be found, even if it is there, in the spring time.

How to GET ALONG.—Do not tell stories in business hours. If you have a place of business, there when wanted.

Never "fool" in business matters. Have order, system, regularity, promptness. Do not meddle with business not your own.

Strive to avoid harsh words and allities. Pay as you go. A man of honor respects his own does his bond.

Do not kick every stone in your way. More miles can be made in a day steadily on than by stopping. Help others when you can. Give when you cannot afford to, because it is fashionable.

Learn to think and act for yourself. Keep ahead rather than behind times. Let tobacco alone, money pays for enough, without being cheated by it.
