THE CAPTIVE ENIGHT.

Wm. Murray and wife to Henry Good jatler, pray open the door of my cell. For a friend that I love is near; I knew the dear sound of his harrying step Whenever it struck my ear.

O friend of my youth, I am doomed to die, And I have a fair young bride, And I leave to you, dying, the prayer of my heart, That she never know how I died.

You may tell her I fell in a foreign hand For a cause that was just and high ;

But let her not dream that her loy'd one died As the felons in our land Cie.

But a tyrant lord 1've slain Alone of my life remain.

And the hand that obeyed is clear :

hope Can even be happy here.

But never a word of the prison dark, Of the shunn'd and nameless grave That I met in exchange for the fame I sought,

Shall the wind take over the wave. The hand that she gave me to keep through life Shall never be held in scorn, wife, Shall never in shame be worn.

She is fragile enough to die.

"This hope is laid up in my bosom," but this, "That I my God shall see." The things of this world are vanishing fast,

And its fame is naught to me. factory at Woodvale going into operation, Yet here, with my soul in the trembling words That I leave for my far-off bride, I give to you, dying, the prayer of my heart, He will also lease his large STORE ROOM. Po YANG.
