The custody of the children has been awarded to the husband. ANOTHER GHOST STORY .- There have been a series of ghostly stories afloat in the papers of late that exceed in number and marvelousness anything in the recent literature of the supernatural. These include the spectral urchin who port; the spiritual operator who has been sending special telegrams from the other world to some office in Ohio; the engineer who haunts the engine that he managed in his former state. and several other such casual or chronic visitors from the other world. And now Virginia comes forward with her installment of the unearthly. The story is this: A woman named Silla Summers was lying at the point of death in the second story of her house at Matthews Courthouse. In a room below were her husband, who was confined to his bed with rheumatism, and a few neighbors. Suddenly Mr. Summers arose in his bed, and directed the attention of the other inmates of the room to the fireplace. They looked and saw the word "Silla" spelled in letters of fire on a charred log. The name was visible for perhaps a minute, when it gradually faded out and disappeared; and at that same instant a wait from the attendants in the room above told that Mrs. Summers was dead. How we would scout at a novelist who would tell such a story ; yet this story is told and repeated by dozens of papers in the South and East as if it was a well-authenticated oc-PUTTING a hoop on the family flour barrel is an operation that will hardly bear an encore. The woman generally attempts it before the man comes home to dinner. She sets the hoops up on shutting both eyes brings the pin down with all the force of one arm, while the other instinctively shields her face .----Then she makes a dive for the camphor and unbleached muslin, and when the man comes home she is sitting back of the stove, thinking of St. Stephen and the other martyrs, while a burnt dinner and the camphor are struggling heroically for the mastery. He says have got hurt. And he visits the barrel himself and puts the hoop on carefully, and adjusts it so nicely to the top of every stave that only a few smart duocks apparently are needed to bring it down all right, then he laughs to himself to think what a fuss his wife kicked up over a simple matter that only needed a little patience to adjust itself, and
