A BOQUET FOR MOTHER. BY MAUDE. I have nothing else to offer

[ORIGINAL.]

On this joyous festal day, But with hope and love I proffer My poor tribute-a boquet.

Now you'll laugh and say I'm joking, But have patience and you'll see That I am indeed in earnest, Which is something new for me.

In the centre of my nosegay Must the "quech of flowers" be And MOTHER shall have that fromor,

For a very Rose is she. And here's a shining oak-leaf-

Part of that noble tree-For GIBB a fitting emblem, And a pledge of what he'll be.

Beside the sturdy oak-leaf I will place a "bleeding heart"-

That's PORT, who, as our family staff, Bears patiently his part.

Next are some "apple blossoms"-Dear Lizzie's pledge are they-For when those buds doth wither Fruit will appear some day.

Among the leaves a "primrose" Nestles so smilingly; And MAUDE, you will acknowledge, Is sweet simplicity.

Then comes a dainty blossom-Its name I'll not forget-Your darling little JENSTE, Our fragrant mignionette.

"Rosemary" boasts no color, Bot claims "sincerity"-Faithful in storm and sunshine-

Thus you ever will find me. Now my task is finished, And this rare boquet is made ; 1 hope it's beauties please you, For then I'll be repaid.

Mother, the reason you should prize These flowers that for you bloom-Their prayer for you doth daily rise To Heaven in sweet perfume.

In his pain and wrath the white man repaid this wound with a shower of tremendous blows, but the episode had been a diversion in favor of Unakavahswah, who by a supreme heave and twist managed to wrest himself from beneath his load and regain his feet. Terrific fisticuffs followed, but in these the scientific boxing proficiency of the Carolinian caused such one-sided business that the sorely-punished red grant, after failing to get in a single blow, rallied for a clinch. Ilis object was to force the fighting in the direction of the tree in which stuck his tomahawk, and detecting this purpose, the Major fought furiously to thwart

it. Once when the savage hurled himself with all his might upon his foe, the latter's feet caught in a trailing grape vine and brought him down on his back in the fierce grapple. Both were up again as quickly in the opposing physical impulses in straining toother fall, in which he was uppermost. This time, too, even with a pair of red in drawing his knife.
