"All the same,' said I, jumping in. "The stranger followed, and I don't know what he did, but I soon fell asleep. "I don't know how late or early it was moon was shining bright through the window. The clothes were turned over from the front side of the bed, and there stood my bedfellow, leaning over me with a big knife in one hand, a fumbling at the buckle of my belt with the other."

"Of course you grasped the arm that wielded the knife with one of your hands, and the villain's throat with the other?" interrupted a blustering juryman.

"Well, no, I didu't." "You cried out, then?"

"Not that either." "Well," said the blustering juryman, "I'd like to see the man rob me without a tussle for it. Suppose he had killed youwhat, after all, is death? Only an 'eternal sleep,' philosophy tells us." "That may be," said Uncle Joe; "but I

"Well," continued Uncle Joe, "I lay still as a mouse till that pesky critter un-done my belt, and slipped it from under me, which he did so gently that I hardly felt it, wide awake as I was. Then he pulled the cover over me, and tucking it in as careful as mother could have done, he buckled my belt around him, finished dressing, and slipped out."

"And you lay there and let yourself be robbed without uttering a word?" again broke in the blustering juryman. "I didn't see any good in speaking, said Uncle Joe; "I knew he'd sock his knife into me if I so much as chirped, and take his chance of cutting his way through the landlord afterward, if he woke up. No, I didn't say a word, but just turned over and took another nap, and in good time got up, just as if nothing had happened. I got to my journey's end that day, and bought my land the next."

But your money?" the foreman reminded him. "O, that was all right," said Uncle Joe. "Why, didn't the robber get it?"

"He got the belt," Unclo Joe answered. "You see, mother and me knew that money belts had got so much in fashion that they were the first thing every robber went for, and once they got a man's belt they'd go off contented.
