THE MANIAC SEA CAPTAIN

The following thrilling circumstances are derived from the history of the New York marine : On a bright morning in October, 1849, To amount in Treasurer's hands an American packet ship in the Liverpool trade left the anchorage in the lower bay of New York, and went on her way to the sex. She was deeply laden with an assorted cargo, but being a staunch, fast ship, and having experienced officers and a full crew, it was expected that her voyage would be safely and speedily performed.

Captain Benson, the commander, was an "old sea dog," as the saying is. Boy and man, he had spent the best portion of his life on the ocean, and there was no captain sailing out of port who was regarded as more thoroughly reliable in every particular. He was now, however, advanced in years, and he declared that after a few more voyages he would retire. He had made money, and besides interests in other vessels, owned one half of the ship which he commanded. During the previous voyage there were some peculiarities in his conduct which attracted the attention of his mates, and was mentioned to the agents; but nothing further was thought of it.

The gallant ship passed Sandy Hook, and when well off the shore the pilot left her. The wind was fair and every sail was up, and a willing crew were putting everything in order for ocean navigation. When the pilot went over the side he remarked : "Captain Benson, I will report you as having a fair wind, and going like a racer.' "Ay, ay," shouted the captain; "let all New York stand by and look. I'm bound to beat everything that floats or ever will float. Look out for my report from Liverpool or from the bottom of the Atlantic-I don't know which. Ha, ha, ha?" The language, its tone, and the laugh, were all so strange that the pilot could not Boningly help turning to give a look of surprise at Boarding Jurors .... the face of the captain. This was all, however, and the next moment he was in his boat, tossing amid the waves, while the ship's sails, under orders from the cap- Court House ...... tain, were again filled, and she fairly flew | Court Crier .... on her way:

The captain of a vessel is a king at sea. Crimical Prosecutions... His orders are law, and any interference District Court ....... with him or them is mutiny-a crime punishable with death. Hence it can be seen that when the other officers of this New York packet found Captain Benson saying and doing very strange and dangerous things, they had hitle else to do but submit and obey. This course of action began as soon as the pilot left, and it continued increasing from day to day. At length they became convinced that he was either actually insane or bordering upon it. By his orders sail was kept on his hip to a most alarming extent. She was driven not only over but through the monster waves. Great mountains of water fell upon her decks, and it frequently seemed as if she would not again rise to the surface. There was I a great strain upon the hill, and the masts | Printing .... bent and twisted like reeds. Sails and Probates .... spars were blown away, but again and again came orders from the captain to repair damages and set the sails anew. The officers were in the greatest distress of mind, and the crew were muttering and threatening to go in a body to the captain and remonstrate in regard to this state of a Tairs. But still no one dared to act, fearing the terrible consequencess of a conflict | State Auditors...

Captain Benson said little to anybody, except to issue orders. He looked pale. and his eyes had the dead, glassy look observable in those affected with insanity. He walked the cabin and deck with hands sind him, and at intervals muttered to y on him for some time, and ded and uncontrolable. For ten days the ship had been havigated by a madman. One afternoon the weather looked very threatening, and it was evident there was to be a severe gale. Still the captain made no preparation for it. In fact, he crowded more sail on as the day advanced. Stand ing on the deck he shouted: "You sea dogs, put on every rag. Winds, blowblow-blow! We are going no faster than New York lighter. Look alive, men. Ha, ha, ha! Now she jumps. Blow, ye of the commander, and to refuse might be death. The ship rushed onward, with her hell shive; ing to the very keel and her masts threatening to snap asunder.

"Ha, ha, ha!" laughed the captain, as danger of his being washed overboard. "Captain Benson," said the first mate, coming up with a serious countenance, "the wind is increasing, and we are going to have a heavy blow. It is the judgment of all your officers that sail should be taken

"Sir," said the captain, with a wild glance, "I know my business and my duty; D. R. Wissinger, Adams Twp ... and you are a set of cowards, and do not want to do the ship or the owners justice. Wm. Lloyd, Croyle Township. She is no harbor lighter-no coaster-but an ocean racer. Begone, sir, to your duty. I shall not take in any sail. Ha, ha, ha! Blow, ye winds—blow, blow!"

whip. The clouds grew black and blacker -the sea looked wild at lugly. Down went the ship into the vortex, and then she | H. Walters, Summerhill Twp .... rose, shaking the torrents of water from S. Akins, White Township, her, to rush again on her desperate way. A short consultation of the officers was Dan, Berthold, Woodvale Borough held, the result of which was communicated to the crew who received it with a cheer. The first mate then gave an order, · bich was reported, and in an instant the crew set about taking in sail. As soon as the captain saw it he began to gesticulate fearfully, and cried out "Mutineers! vil-I sins! I'll hang every one of you! At your peril take in a single sail! Come down on

With wild screams and threats be hastily loosened himself from the rail, and started for the cabia. All knew that he was going to arm himself. Consequently two of the mates intercepted and seized him. In a moment more he was securely bound. What little reason there was left, departed forever from this moment. His screams, oaths, threats and laughter were Am heard above the roaring wind. He ring gled until completely exhausted, and then lay with his glaring eyes wide open.

The ship was taken safely into port under the command of the first mate. The action with the captain was fully recognized as proper and opportune for the salvation of the ship and all on board. Captain Benson was taken back on her return to New York in a most dangerous condition of madness, and was consigned on her for some five years, when he died. At his carefully examined the accounts and voucharrival to an asylum. He was confined most lucid intervals he imagined himself ers of Receipts and Expenditures of said on his ship, carrying all sail, but he was County from the 21st day of January 1873 generally violent, and had to be kept under severe restraint.
