Communication,

CROYLE TWP., May 25, 1874. DEAR FRREMAN-I see in your last issue another communication from the mouth-piece of the South Fork cut-worms. Judging from the weakness of his #ssertiens, "B. R. R." must have had an overdose of cut-worms, and as a to see, however, by the tone of "B. B. R. S. last epistle, that sevessionism is on the wane at South Fork, notwithstanding its great medium has pawned the most precious part of his being in the effort to establish the as good as lost "B. E. R." seems to be very anxious to find out what I know about the camp at Burk's mill, etc. I have no knowledge of such a camp ever having been in existence, and I am confident that none of Croyle township's brave sons over knew of any camp except those on Southern soil, where they did their duty faithfully.

I know of only a few men who were drafted and who sought to avoid the responsibility. One of these went to Washington, where Union propensities were strong, and saw President

One of these went to Washington, where Union propensities were strong, and saw President Lincoln himself, who had him relieved on the ground of insanity; another reported, and when asked by the examining surgeon if he claimed exemption, said that he aid on the plea of having no teeth behind. Still another one unfortunately got one of his great toes in a cutting-box, but still served out his time. All the other men of Croyle who were duffted or who voluntarily entered the army responded without a mormur, and many of them have rewithout a murmur, and many of them have recorded their deeds of valor in their own blood on Southern battle-fields. They never were in the rebel camp at Burk's saw-mill, nor anywhere else except where duty called them "R. E. R." charges our enteprising and Union-loving village of Summerbill with entertaining secession proclivities. Summerhill, be it known, is one of the oldest towns in the county, and the citizens of the township and of the town in question have always itsed on the most friendly and peaceable terms. And so it is to-day, but having become a place of considera-ble business notoriety and possessing a more than sufficiently numerous and constantly in-creasing population of permanent citizens, it is quite natural that Summerhill should desire to become a borough, especially as more strin-gent local laws are needed to protect its people and its property from the depredations of the South Fork robels who have so lately seceded.

I am also charged by the same writer with being a hondescript, which is of course a false charge; and yet. I would rather be a nondescript than a transcript from the rebel dockets, He also wishes to know what I am crying about. The reason is this, I would much rather fight rebels with powder and lead than with pen and the later than the research of ink, but as I can't have my own way about it just now, of course I feel like blubbering. The invitation to dine with him on brimstone stew (whiskey stew is no doubt what he meant, us the effects and results are the same in the long run.) comes with good grace from "B. E. R." and yet I am constrained to decline the kind invitation, inasinuch as I do not like to go so far South to dine with no better company than South Fork cut-worms and their rebel "B. E. R." throws out some hints about prose cuting the war, which hists he will no doubt act upon until, like his great chief Jaff. Davis, he finds himself so unpleasantly situated he will be forced to come back into the Union disguised in female apparel. May this, how-ever, be "B E, R.'s" last ditch, and may be be swamped in the effort to leap it.

The cut-worm apologist also charges me with being mad. Well, I can stand it as well as St. Faul, who had to contend with heasts and false accusers, and rebels in general, who likewise charged him with being mad. "B. E. R." does not think well of my friends Ogline & Co., which may be accounted for by the fact that they were all strong Union men and strictly temperate in their habits, and they ning on Friday afternoon last, which did considerable damage to property. The spire of St. Mary's Catholic church was struck by the subtle finid and considerably shatter-tered, and two little children who were looking out of the window of a residence near by at the time were somewhat stunned by the stroke. A house in Gaysport was also struck by lightning, the electric current passing down the chimney and entering a struck by lightning, the electric current passing down the chimney and entering a corner cuplicard, where it demolished some covered by law, as debts of a similar amount in the control of the control o of the dishes and burnt up a paper of smo-king tobacco.
