LEFT WITH THE BABY.

Mrs. Graham came over the other night and wanted to know if I wouldn't take care of her year-old baby for fifteen minutes, and let her and Mrs. Quad go down town and buy a pair of shoes for a poor old woman. She added that the little darling was sound asleep, and wouldn't even wink while they were gone, and I consented. -She brought him in and laid him on a sofa, snugly tucked him up, kissed him fourteen times, and then they were gone.

I sat writing, and by-and-by I forgot all about the child. The woman had been gone about seven minutes and a half when all of a sudden the baby yelled out :

"Ili whoo-kooy-boo-whoop!" and he kicked his little blanket sky high, and sat up and looked at me.

"Well, my son, the drowsy god has flown away, eh?" I jaquired as I approached

He opened his eyes very wide, discovered I wasn't his father or mother, and he shrank away and velled out :

"Ki-yi-whoop-whoa-hi!" I went in and found the sugar bowLand selected a fat lump, but he stuck up his nose in disgust at the sight of it, and howled until a chromo of the Washington family was jarred down. I took down the looking-glass and held it so that he could see himself. He held up for a moment, amazed at the sight of such a face, and then started off on a louder key. I heard pedestrians stop under the window to listen, and I scrubbed around and got hold of a basin and the stove handle.

The pounding stopped his howling for about thirty seconds, but then the novelty wore off, and he threw himself back and screamed until he was as red as an Indiana fanning mill. The crowd under the window increased, and I heard a vitlain say :

"Some one ought to go for the police! That old tyrant of a Quad is murdering

I got a piece of bread and butter from the pantry, and the boy took it, held it under his nose for an instant, and then threw it and hit me on the knee, and howled until I expected he would burst a blood vess sel. I got down a picture-book and tried to make him look at William Penn preach ing to the Indians, under a tree in sight of Philadelphia, but he took one glance and then kicked me on the chin and velled : "B o hoo-ooh : hi-ri-hi !"

"Young man," I replied, as I bent over him and pointed my finger at his nose, "is there anything in this house you want?-What will you take to shut up? How much to eall it square ?"

He seemed to feel insulted, and he howled until I could look down his throat. I attempted to pick him up, but he wriggled away and fell on his head on the floor. I

"It is our duty to go in there and tomahawk the old wretch !" velled one of the crowd under the window, and I got out some sugar and a stocking and made a sugar-teat for the young scoundrel. He took it, held it up and gazed at it, and then flung it at the stove. I handed him apples fried, cakes, prune sauce, raisin cake and pickeled peaches; but nothing would stop his howling. He kicked in the crystal of my watch, tore my neck-tie off, and pulled my hair, and, finally, when the women had been gone two hours, I determined to kill the imp. I brought in the butcher knife, ax, revolver and hammer, placed them before him, asked him to take his choice. He wouldn't stop his dreary howling, and I had my coat off and the ax raised over him when his mother came. She doesn't know to this day but that I got these things in there as play-things to amuse her young villain; but he knows it, and $50,000 wouldn't hire him to look intomy back yard through the alley fence .-M. DEATH OF THE DIAMOND CONCEALER. -An old man, well-known in Brussels, who would appear every afternoon with mathematical regularity in the St. Hubert areade, where he would walk for exactly one hour from 5 to 6 o'clock, died recently in that city. The oldest dwellers in that quarter of Brussels remember to have seen bim take his daily promenade for many years back without ever conversing with any one. Among his papers a will was f und in which he asked to be buried in a neighboring cemetery by his wife's side, and requested that a person who now fills an exalted position in St. Petersburg might be informed of his death. It appears that when young he had been employed in a diamond-producing district of Asia. Oue day he found an enormous diamond and determined to secure it for himself. The difficulty was how to escape the lynx-eyed agents. He made a deep wound in the calf of his leg in which he concealed the diamond. He then pretended that he had been wounded and his leg was bound up and he was authorized to leave the district. He succeeded in escaping to Russia, where he sold the gem for a large sum. It is now one of the crown diamonds of Russia. - TIN, COPPER & SHEET-IRON Having thus acquired wealth, our hero traveled all over the world. In England he married a young lady, who died in Brussels some years ago. After her death he did not wish to leave the city where she
