MULES AND HORSES.—Mules on an city retail prices. Sold for each at HUNTLEY'S. average are more valuable than horses, are more easily raised, are not so subject to disease, are not likely to run away in wagoning and ploughing, and are longer lived, will do more work and require less feed and attention; they are stronger, will draw heavier loads and stand a great deal more hardship, and are in every way preferable to horses for general farm use. Mules come in earlier, being ready for light work when three years old. They will then do enough work on the farm to pay for their feed, and after having attained the age of four years they are ready for any kind of service. But the horse (colt) must be kept until he is four years old before he is worked at all, and when he is four he must be a first rate colt to bring as much as the mule will at two veris old. But assume the animals are both required for farm work, see what a difference there is in favor of the mule. The working life of the finde can be safely estimated at thirty years, and that of the horse at ten years. So while a mule is working its life out, three horses will be required to do equal service. But these are not the only items. The saving of feed is at least one-fourth, or not less than 647 bushels of corn and 427 tons of hay. This Are not over, but rather under, those of any other amount, added to the original saving in purchase of animals, shows an advantage in favor of the use of the mule over the horse of over $1,000 during the ordinary life of the animal. The mule is less dainty about food, unground grain and dry feed being just the thing for him. There are still other advantages in favor of the mule too numerous to mention .- Exchange.

TO DRY APPLES, PEARS AND OTHER FRUITS.-Have a frame made in the following manner:

Two strips of board 7 feet long, 2 the long strips, wails are driven 3 inches apart, extending from one end to the other. After the apples are pared, they are quartered and cored, and with needle and twine, or stout thread. of the twine are then tied together and the strings hung on the nails across the frame. The apples will soondry so that the string can be doubled on the nails and fresh ones put on, or the whole of them removed and others put in their place. As fast as the apples become sufficiently dry they can be taken from the strings and the same strings used to dry more on. If large apples are used to dry, they can be cut in smaller pieces. Pears and quinces and other fruit that can be strung may be dried in this way. In pleasant weather the frames can be set out of doors against the side of the building, or any other support, and at night, or on cloudy and stormy days, they can be brought into the house and set against the side of the room near the stove or fire-place.
