THE CONQUERORS OF THE WORLD

The aim of Genghis was literally conquest of the world-as he conceive -and was nearer its accomplishment in a own life, and in that of two of his descri ants, Kublai and Timur, than it had e been before, or is likely to be again. The empire which he created counted all its limits probably one-half of the still human race, and extended from the Sec. Okhotsk, at the north-east ra esternit Asia, over the whole breadth of the Ciuli ent as far as the Black Sea. Insant such ambition seems, it must have source in some perennial springs of with common to our nature, since it constant reappears with a certain periodicity successive ages-fortunately for aparts and in races still more widely separat by ethnographic characters and surroun conditions. Assyrian, Babylonian, and Persian. Greek, Roman and French have and turn sent forth heroes on this quest it universal empire. With the Romans also it became the insanity or ambilian of people, who for successive ages sought be the rulers of the world, and actually founded an imperial sway over Early from the Rhine to the Danube, and in As and Africa, nearly as far as Alexander bad penetrated on either continent. The whole of Asia and Eastern Europe had not however, been under the scoptre of 1 single ruler until Timur swooped from his Mongolian steppes, the heir of the tri Great Mogul, and camped in the heart of Hungary and Poland, with a mixed set
