MONOMANIA IN HORSES.

In 1806, during the campaign of Austerlitz, a Piedmontese officer possessed a beautiful, and, in other respects, a serviceable, mare, but which one peculiarity rendered at times very dangerous for the saddle. She had a decided aversion to paper, which she immediately recognized the moment she saw it, and even in the dark if one or two leaves were rubbed together. The effect produced by the sight or sound of it was so prompt and violent that in many cases she unhorsed her rider; and in one case, his foot being entangled in the stirrup, she dragged him a considerable way over a stony road. In other respects this mare had not the slightest fear of objects that would terrify most horses. She regarded not the music of the band, the whistling of the balls, the roaring of the cannons, the fire of the bivouacs, or the glittering of arms. The confusion and noise of an engagement made no impression upon her; the sight of no other white object affected her; no other sound was regarded; the view or the rustling of paper alone roused her to madness. All possible means were employed to cure her of this extraordinary and dangerous aberration, but without success; and her master was at length compelled to sell her, for his life was in continual danger. A mare belonged to the French guard royal from 1815 to 1821. She was perfectly manageable, and betrayed no antipathy to the human being, nor to other animals, nor to horses, except they were of a light gray color, but the moment she saw a gray horse she rushed upon it and attacked it with the greatest fury. It was the same at all times and everywhere. She was all that he wished on the parade, on the route, in ranks, in action and in the stable; but such was her hatred toward gray or white horses that it was dangerous to place them in the stable with her at whatever distance. If she once caught a glimpse of one, whether horse or mare, she rested not until she had thrown her rider, or broken her halter, and then she rushed on it with the greatest fury and bit it in a thousand pieces. She generally, however, seized the animal by the head or throat, and held it so fast that she would suffocate it if it were not promptly released from her bite.

As she grew old the mania was not quite removed, but it was somewhat weakened. No other body of a white color appeared to make the least impression upon her. A mare belonging to the fifth squadron of French hussars feared, on the contrary, all white inanimate objects, such as white mantles, coats, or even the sleeves of shirts and chemises too much displayed, and particularly white plumes. When any of these white bodies, especially in motion, were first perceived, if they were of any magnitude, and their motion was rapid, she was in a dreadful fright, and strove to escape; but if they were of no great size and moved more gently, she rushed furiously upon them, struck at them with her fore feet, and endeavored to tear them with her teeth. No other colors produced the slightest effect upon her, nor did the appearance, however sudden, of a white horse, or dogs of the same color; but if a white plume waved, or a white sheet of water floated by her, her fear or rage was ungovernable. These three cases of singular and peculiar aversion possess all the characters of the true monomania.

A CANARY THAT SINGS "HOME, SWEET HOME."—Mr. Philip Wall, of Phœnixville, besides being largely engaged in the cigar and tobacco business at that place, devotes much attention to the rearing and training of canary birds for sale. He has one now among his collection that sings very sweetly "Home, Sweet Home," every note of which is clear and distinct. Mr. Wall informs us that it required considerable trouble to teach the bird to sing the old and popular song, and now it warbles nothing else. His mode of instruction he informs us was as follows: He placed the canary in a room where it would not hear the singing of other birds, suspended its cage from the ceiling, so that it would see its reflection in a mirror, and beneath the latter placed a musical box, that was regulated to play no other tune but "Home, Sweet Home."—Hearing no other sounds but this, and believing the music proceeded from the bird it saw in the mirror, the young canary soon began to catch the notes, and finally accomplished what its owner had been laboring to attain, that of singing the song perfectly. Mr. Wall has been offered and refused $20 for this canary.—Pottstown Ledger.

"WHEN THE COWS COME HOME."—Many of our farmers have wasted years of valuable time just because they did not teach their cows to come home at night. Any one who has lived or traveled in the country will remember the familiar "Co-bos, Co-bos," of the farmer's son or hired man, as he endeavors to coax the cows from the great pasture. We have had a little experience in this matter, and well remember how many times we have waded through the brush and bog, looking for the cows, and, boy-like, we thought them dreadfully contrary animals; but we have lived long enough to learn better, and now think that the biped was the more contrary of the two. Boys, we will tell you a secret that will save you a great deal of trouble, and it is this: Every time the cows are driven up at night, or in the morning, give them a good lick of meal or bran, and our word for it, the cows will always be on hand at milking time. Besides this, they will give more milk, and forget to kick over the milk pail, even if you do whistle a little too loud.—Exchange.

HOW AN EARLY SETTLER ATTENDED A WEDDING.—A Scrape of Unwritten History.—The early history of Cooper county is full of interest and romance. About the year 1820 there were but few families living on the south side of the river. The most prominent were by the name of Cole, who had a fort about two miles below Booneville, into which they retreated when in danger from Indians. Such a thing as a wedding was a rare occurrence, as the population was very scattered, and it was inconvenient to assemble, as people lived so far from each other. About this time the Cole family was invited to attend a wedding in Cooper's Bottom, over the river, in Howard county, and about eight miles off. The elder Cole, his wife and all of the children, except a boy named Sam, about sixteen years old, got ready to attend the wedding and for that purpose all the clothes belonging to the family were brought into requisition. They started early in the evening, as they had to travel a considerable distance and cross the Missouri river, and left Sam, by himself, at home. Towards evening he commenced to muse on the subject of the wedding, and his curiosity became intensely excited to witness the event. But there was no horse to ride, the river was to cross, and it was too late to cross by the ferry. Besides all the clothes were gone (it was in the summer) and Sam's only garment was a tow shirt. Fortunately just as the sun was going down Sam espied his father's pet bull slowly making his way up to the fort, and the idea occurred to him, that here was a way to get to the wedding. He immediately improvised a bridle of hickory bark, put it on the bull, mounted him and started just as he was. He got to the river just at dark, went about three hundred yards above the ferry landing, and boldly urged his trusty steed into the foaming current of the Missouri river. He landed on the other side at the usual place safe and sound, and ascended the bank and took up his line of march to the wedding, got to the cabin in time, anchored his bull opposite the open door, where he could see, laid down on the back of his steed and gazed, for the first time, on a wedding. He laid on his bull where he could see all that was going on and not be seen himself, till late in the evening, when, as he declined to go into the company, he was stowed away out of sight till morning, when he returned, with the rest of the family, home.

The hero of this incident is still living in this county, enjoying a green old age and a reputation surpassed by none of the many prosperous farmers of this county, and no man stands higher in the estimation of his fellow citizens than Captain Sam Cole.—Boonville Advertiser.

A NEW YEAR'S DIARY.—A large number of the young men of Detroit will to-day purchase diaries for 1876, and to-morrow they will take up their pencils with a firm determination to keep track of every day in the year. Every young man should keep a diary. When he is old and gray his grandchildren will fish it out of the rag bag and find it more valuable than gold or silver. There is no set style of jotting down thoughts and events, but perhaps it may be well to give the record of 1875 as taken from the pocket diary of an average young man:

"January 1—Went to see my girl. Shall leave off swearing, drinking, cussing, smoking, chewing, being out nights, betting, going to the opera, and shall try to save $10,000 this year."

"January 7—Went to see my girl. Lost a box of cigars somewhere."

"February 1—Won $25 betting on a dog-fight. That's the way to scoop 'em. Am trying to get along on fifteen cigars per day. Went to see my girl. She says I shouldn't swear."

"April 20—Went to see my girl. Nothing new."

"Jul. 4—This is the glorious Fourth."

"September 1—Went to see my girl."

"November 11—Glorious weather. Went to see my girl."

"December 1—This is the 1st of December."

"December 25—This is Christmas."

"December 31—This is the last day of the year. I must commence to-morrow to save money and break off my bad habits. Went to see my girl last night, and made her happy by telling her that I was going to save $10,000 next year."—Detroit Free Press.

A CITY IN THE SEA.—A Kingston (Jamaica) correspondent writes: "In the latter end of the century, old Port Royal disappeared beneath the waves, in an earthquake, leaving no other memorial behind than these few patches of reefs. In calm and clear evenings, when there is not a ripple on the glassy surface of the sea, you may look down into fifteen fathoms of water, see submerged houses, churches, and towers, with shark swimming quietly in and out of the open windows of their belfries. The work of centuries was destroyed in a few moments by one single convulsive throb of the thin film on which man has lived and speculated for ages past. An American diving company, instigated in their enterprise by tales of untold wealth buried beneath the sea by this sudden shock, rescued no treasures but the big bell suspended still in the bell tower, and donated the same to the museum of the island, where it may have been seen, with many puzzling inscriptions upon it which nobody as yet has been able to decipher."

HE was a young man in the prime of life, and he stealthily approached the corner of a fashionable avenue at 11 o'clock P. M., Dec. 31. He loaded his little shotgun, and stood irresolute; 1875 was on its last legs. The clock struck 12; he gazed upon the firmament in doubt. Should he shoot a star, or crack a piece of crater out of the poor old moon. Suddenly a window over the way was opened and a fair young creature in the flush of youth let fly a juvenile cracker upon the sidewalk. It gave two cracks and fluffed. "That's not bad," said the young man, "try it some more," and he shut his eyes turned the other way, and fired two shots at one of the starry rings which greeted the new year. So 1876 was born, and two young hearts were made happy.

Miniature Garden and Menagerie in the Mouth.

By means of the microscope a great variety of organisms have been discovered in the oral cavity, growing and thriving on the upper and under surface of the tongue, on the inner side of the lips, on the inner side of the cheeks, on the gums and palate, in the throat, and in the œsophagus [illegible] far as the upper opening of the stomach. Some of these minute forms of life are the accompaniments of disease. The White Plant (Oidium albicans), for example, occurs most frequently in the mouths of the persons who are in the habit of breathing impure air, or eating unwholesome food, or those in whom and vigor have been interfered with by previous gastric or intestinal disease. A plant known as Crypto-coccus, is very abundant in the mouth of persons who are subject to typhus, and in the oral secretions of those who have suffered from any organic disease. But the last mentioned is to be met with also in the mouths of people in moderately good health. Its growth is encouraged by the use of malt liquors. Let those who drink that a quart of ale is a dish for a king take note of it. A sort of plant called Leptothrix buccalis is found in the mouths, and it is impossible entirely to eradicate it, or to prevent its development. It consists of slender, colorless fibres of various length, one end is free; the other is planted by small projects from a fine granular mass, and though a limited number of plants are always floating in the secretions, attached from any substance, slender hairs are met with which singly, sometimes in bundles, multiply with great rapidity, and scarcely any portion of the mouth is free from them. Along with these forms of life we must associate what are known as animals or, according to some, plastic particles. Naturalists are divided on the subject as to whether these should be regarded as independent living things of the lowest grade, having an individuality of their own, or whether they should be looked upon as developmental forms of some higher organisms, either animal or vegetable. They were first described by Lewenhoek about two hundred years ago. Writing in 1683 he tells of his taking a little tartar substance which he had collected, in spite of all his washing, and rubbing and brushing—to collect between the teeth, and mixing it with rain water, a drop of the liquid no larger than a grain of sand he saw thousands of animalculæ. They reminded him of gnats or flies sporting in the air, or fishes darted about like jack fish, others with a whirling motion. We might also mention the Paramecia, an organism of the oral cavity belonging to the animal kingdom. Other genus of infusoria about these cavities have been described by others, too, which want of space compels us to pass over. Our curiosity would have been served if the reader has been led to see that for the purposes of botanical and zoological observation we need not hurry away to the fields, we have only to open our mouths.—Cassell's.

YOUNG LIONS NURSED BY TIGRESS.—Carefully caged in our Central Park Museum are two young cubs. They are four or five weeks old, and are the pet and lioness, fine healthy little creatures, and are nearly old enough to be shown to the public. They are the progeny of the pair of beasts known as Lincoln and Jenny, in the Menagerie. But the mother being from some cause unable to nurse them, a tigress that was once given to a large terrier bitch with puppies were taken away, and she now plays the part of a foster mother. She seems, indeed, as fond of the cubs as if they were her own offspring. She covers them with caresses, though they are nearly as big as she is. It is a curious fact that lions reared in captivity are not as gentle as those captured and tamed. The parents of these cubs, which were caught when young and tamed, are very tractable animals, some of the other lions which were born and brought up in the Menagerie are sullen and ferocious.—Scientific American.

HUNGARIAN GRASS FOR COWS.—The following is the testimony of a farmer respecting Hungarian grass. He says: "I believe I can make more milk from this grass, cut and mixed with bran, meal and shorts, than I can from the best timothy hay, cut and mixed in the same manner. And what is more, I remember that you can raise on an ordinary land, by sowing the seed of Hungarian grass late in June, from two and a half to three and a half bushels of good fodder to the acre, and I believe this crop can be sown after we have ascertained whether we are to have a good crop of hay or not, you will know the value of this grass. I have formed a high opinion of it that on my own farm this year and last, I raised from seventy-five to one hundred tons of it for the purpose of feeding to my milch cows during the winter.

A SIMPLE RULE.—Here is a rule which will enable everybody to find out the day of the week upon which any given event fell a hundred years ago. Count forward two days from the day of the week upon which the Centennial anniversary falls. Thus, the 4th of July, 1876, will fall on Tuesday; the 4th of July, 1776, was Thursday. The Centennial anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill was celebrated Thursday, June 17, 1875. The battle was fought Saturday, June 17, 1775. The rule must not, however, be used for dates in the eighteenth century earlier than 1752, that being the year when the change from the old style to the new was made in England and her colonies.
