THE FAMOUS GUN TRICK.

Philip Astley, noted for his equestrian amphitheatre, is said to have begun life as a soldier, in which capacity, when on foreign service with his regiment, he demonstrated his ability as a conjuror by inventing the now famous gun-trick. This consists in pretending to fire a pistol loaded with ball, and catching the ball on the point of a knife. The explanation of the trick is, that in the first place the pistol is secretly loaded only with blank cartridge. In this harmless condition the conjuror slips into it a tin tube which nicely fits it, and then ostentatiously loads it with ball. Before firing, the tin tube is dexterously removed and when the weapon is fired manœuvre the bullet is triumphantly exhibited as being caught in the recomrades in the army, for one of whom he acted as second. Succeeding in getting the other man's second to assent to the ingenious device, the duelists fired at each other without effect, and the affair was amicably adjusted. Very eleverthis. One might, however, say with Sir Walter Scott in his "Lay of the Last Minstre',"

"But scarce I praise their vent'rous part Who tamper with such dangerous art."

Mr. Frost mentions two instances in which the gun trick proved fatal. One was that of a conjuror in Dublin, who was shot dead by the accidental substitution of a real loaded pistol for one in which the charge was withdrawn The other took place in Germany, at the performance of a conjuror named DeLinsky. He set up his wife to be fired at by six soldiers, each of whom was to bite the ball off his cartridge in charging his gun. Heedlessly, one of the soldiers did not bite off the ball, and Madame DeLinsky was shot through the body. She died on the second day after the accident. The catastrophe clouded the latter years of the unfortunate conjuror. In the course of his travels Houdin visited Algiers, and there astonished the native Arabs with his performance of the gun trick, which he did in a way somewhat peculiar. At one of his entertainments an old Araba lmitted that Monsieur was, doubtiess, a great magieian, but he should prefer to use one of his own pistols. Houdin said this might be done next day, after he had invoked the powers to assist him. It was a severe trial of skill, for there HEATING PARLOR and COOKING wary and suspicious barbarian. Next day the exploit came off. Houdin only stipulated that he should be allowed to load the pistol, the Arab handing him a leaden bullet from a saucerful from which to make his choice This was agreed to. Houdin, as every one thought, dropped the leaden bullet into the pistol, but instead of doing so, he dropped a previously prepared sham bullet, which dissolved into dust on being fired. "Now," said the conjuror to the Arab, "take the pistol, and fire at me, I will eatch the bullet in my mouth." The pistol was fired, and to the profound amozement of the crowd of Arabe, Houdin took a leaden bullet out of his mouth, which all admitted to be the bullet that had been selected from the saucerful. To still further astonish the company TIN, COPPER & SHEET-IRON Houdin declared that by loading with another leaden ball he would bring blood out of a stone wall. All were eager to see this wonderful feat. It was performed in a way differing little from what had already taken place. Instead of dropping a real ball into the pistol Houdin used a sham bullet filled with a red liquid, which dissolved on striking the wall. Wonder tremendous. We believe that Anderson in his gun tricks was similarly in the habit of substituting light composition balls for real bullets, and was equally successful. It was all a matter of sleight of-hand _ Chambers' Journal. Near PENN'A R. R. DEPOT, Cooking Stoves. LITTLE PEOPLD of THE SEA.

The latest investigation into deep sea life shows that the vast area lying beneath the ocean is covered with a simple animal life, boundless in extent and infinite in variety. Under condi-tions too rigid and severe to permit the growth of the humble sea-weed, Its these creatures live, and multiply, and die. Far beyond the reach of light, in a glacial temperature and under enormous pressure exists this wonderful fauna.

As we strip the mystery of vitality off garment after garm n , is it conditions became fewer and its mode of existence less complex, the wonder, instead of becoming less, constantly grows upon the mind. The human intellect longs to find a commensurate physical cause for the effect which we call life. When, as in the higher organic beings, the conditions are many and the process complicated, and the phenomenon of vitality does not seem so puzzling; antecedent seems to bear and all points via Freeport. Its some sort of proposition to consequent. The mind rarely troubles itself to make some distinctions between complicated machinery and motive power. A lib eral display of wheel-work is adequate to account for results without any reference to the iniatial force. But as we contemplated the life of the protoza, which reiga supreme in the ocean's depths, we see the awful and mysteri-ous problem presented in its simplest terms; forms of existence which are formless, organisms possessing no or-gans, life contradicting the very defigans, life contradicting the very definitions of life and yet performing all its essential proportions. The conditions, complex and multitudinous, under which we live are here reduced to two or three; the elements, many and bewildering, which enter into ordinary statements of the problem, are here eliminated, and yet we are forced to recognize the same principle giving functional activity to a mass of struc-TARMERS AND OTRERS, if you inest organic beings.

When we see this formless life governed by laws, each in itself as inexorable as that which guides the rolling planets, and all in their vious combinations as flexible as those which control our human existence, we feel the sense of awe which a whisper from } buy the BEST CORN FODDER AND W CUTTER ever sold in this county. which appears to illustrate the power possessed by milk of absorbing atmospheric impurities. It is that of placing a saucer of milk in a larder, to preserve meat or game from taint. It is said that not only does it answer that purpose, but that the milk after a few
