Mr. Charles Reade, who is too honorable to steal plots, and too sensitive to newspaper criticism to renew his early practice of purchasing them, has let the world into the secret of his scrap-book system. The files of out-of-the-way American newspapers would give him many biuts like this story which comes from Honesdale, Penn. Thirty years ago John Seitz, a German clerk in a New York store, was engaged to a young girl named Katherine Rief. The California gold fever broke out, and he joined a party of adventurers. The first letter that he received from home bore the tidings that his sweet heart was soon to become the mother of his child. He pledged himself to return as soon as posside and marry her. She went to Honesdale to live with her brother, and to wait for her lever's return. Two or three letters came, and then there was silence for years. A young blacksmith named Wendt professed great love for her, and after putting him off for four or five years, she se-cepted him, fully convinced that her gold hunter was dead. She took her child to New York and hvod with her husband. He was a brute. He abused her, and threw to Honesdale after his sweetheart and On assuming the daties of the chair, Mr. child.
