CHARMS AGAINST THE EVIL EYE.

The supposed liability of the innocent multitude to the malevolence of the evil eye caused the superstitious to have recourse to many charms, incantations, and ceremonies to avert Ul-consequences and render the polsoned glance innocuous; among which, as just recorded, prayer and the use of saliva were conspicuous. The wearing of coral brooches, beads, and earrings is still a popular charm in Naples against the evil eye. "In Scotland," says Mr. Graham Dalzell, in his addenda, "a red thread tied about a child's neck, or a rowan cross, (cross of mountain ash,) are believed to be equally efficacious in preventing the influence of evil spirits, evil eyes, and other calamities." In the Middle Ages an amulet, of a lozenge shape, marked with the mystic letters A B R ACADABRA, was worn in the bosom as a certain specific. A cross formed of the wood of the elder tree, affixed to cow-houses and stables, was supposed to protect the cattle from all possible harm. A branch of the rowan tree was also in great favor, and to hold up but a branch or a twig in presence of an eye-biter was sufficient to render her deadliest wishes of no avail. A four-leaved shamrock, which is excessively rare, and all the more highly prized for that reason, was a sovereign antidote. In Pocock's Travels in the East he says that the Arabs of Egypt threw salt into the fire as a charm against the effect of an evil eye, or before loading their camels for a journey through the desert, concluding, as the blue flame arises, that every evil genius is banished. The ejection of saliva was also considered a charm of open, and has been built expressly for the reception of guests visiting the International Exposition. It has all the modern improvements, combining convenience, safety and comfort.

The Chestnut and Walnut and Race and Vine peculiar efficacy. Pliny speaks of it as a certain antidote to "fascination," as well as a preservative from contagion, and in pugilistic encounters as certain to aggravate the violence of a blow. "At the present day, as of old," says Mr. Dalzell, "a Greek mother, as if commemorating the words of Theocritus and Tibullus, spits in her bosom to repel fascinating glances directed toward herself, and dreading the gaze of the sterile on her child, spits in its face." But the most common of all the charms in use against the evil eve is that very vulgar gesture of applying 75 Cents per Bottle-6 Bottles, $4. the thumb to the nose, stretching out the fingers, and "twiddling" them with a rapid motion for a few seconds, commonly practiced by London street boys, without the slightest knowledge, SOLD BY ALL DRUCCISTS. of its origin or meaning, and known in slang parlance as "taking a sight."
