In France, no men marry before eighteen; no woman before fourteen. Under the old monarchy, the ages were fourteen and twelve. By the ancient laws of France, the age for a male was thirty, and twenty-five for a female. In Hesse Darmstadt the rule was that the man must be twenty five; but this was reduced seven years ago to twenty-one, and the number of marriages has much increased in consequence. There is no limit as to the girl's age, it being left to the parents or guardians to take care that no mere child is wedded. In Greece, males cannot marry before fourteen nor females before twelve years of age. In the Ionian Islands, now a part of Greece. the age is sixteen for the male and fourteen for the female. In Hungary, the Catholic (or sacramental) mar-ringes are regulated by canon law, Ebensburg, Oct. 13, 1870.-tf. other marriages by civit law. Under cannon law, the ages are fourteen and twelve, and minors cannot wed without the father's consent. The civil law also fixes twelve as the earliest age at which a girl may marry. Men cease to be minors at twenty-four and women at sixteen. A minor's marriage, withont paternal consent, is null and void. In Italy, the legal marriage is above the usual standard, being eighteen for males and sixteen for females. In Lapland, the age is seventeen for males. In Norway, no limit of age is required. In Sweden, it is twenty-one for males and fifteen for females. In the Netherlands, eighteen in the case of males and twelve for females. In Portugal, fourteen for males and twelve for females. In Prussia, eighteen for males and fourteen for females, and a late law has made marriage merely a civil contract, like the leasing of a house. In Roumania, the ages are eighteen for males and fifteen for females. In Saxony, the limits of age are eighteen for males and sixteen for females; in Spain, fourteen for males and twelve for females. In Switzerland, the limits vary from fourteen to twenty for males and twelve to eighteen for females, according to the Cantonal and other laws. In Turkey, there is no age limitation. In Wurtemburg, the limit is fixed at twenty-one for males and fourteen for females. In Russia, the legal marriage ages are eighteen and sixteen. There are exceptions, however, for the natives of Caucasus may marry, the males at fifteen and the females at thirteen; and in some special cases the Russian Bishop of the diocese can authorize a marriage six months be fore the period allowed by law, either

A BURNING ISLAND .- Some thirtyfive years ago there appeared in the Mediterranean Sea a little island thrown up by volcanic action; it was in fact, a crater, from which steam and cinders were still issuing to the height of several hundred feet. The spectacle was a very grand one as witnessed by seamen, the eruption being accompanied by a loud, roaring noise, and discharges of forked lightning within the ascending column of hot steam and cinders. About four months after this the spot was visited by a British frigate, having on board Walter Scott, who was on his way to Malta in search of health. The volcanic action had so far ceased that he was able to land and examine this little NEW dependency of Great Britain, and, having an interest in anything out of the common course, he decided to do a stout sailor he rode almost to the top of the island, where he found two dolphins and a robin, all dead, no doubt from the hot temperature. On one side steam was bubbling from the GIVE US A TRIAL! ground, which spread itself all around the base of the island, surrounding it as with a cloak. The atmosphere, strongly impregnated with brimstone, was almost suffocating, and if a hole was dug in the ground, it was at once filled with boiling water. Shortly

A GENTLEMAN who "knows all about it," and has tried the experiment with entire success, recommends the following remedy for bunions and corns, from which so many suffer daily: Obtain at the druggists five or six cents worth of saltpetre, put it into a bottle with sufficient olive oil to nearty dissolve it. Shake it up well and rub the inflamed parts night and morning, and more frequently if painful. This is a well-tried remedy.
