MY PERIL AND ESCAPE,

I was a very bold and fearless girl, and my brothers and sisters often dared me to go into lovely places in the dark, or do perilous feats of various kinds, which challenge I never refused. Often they set did not come again. I dropped my candle out to play tricks on me, but it usually on the kitchen hearth and put my foot on happened they fell into their own traps, while I performed my part in safety.

I expected father and mother soon after eight o'clock and I told Thomas he might go about that time, and they would soon be home, as it looked a little like rain. Heavy clouds were gathering in the west and the thunder rumbled sullenly, He took the covered wagon and old gray, and before he stepped in said:

"Miss Ann, I think you had better fasten the doors, as you may be all alone for a short time if I go so soon. Would you not rather that I should wait until your father comes?"

"Oh, no, Thomas; I don't mind being alone in the least, and you ought to go lest it should rain hard, for it is more than two miles to ride, and they may not wish to father and mother every moment. Don't wan.

So Thomas left, and the wagon rattled merrily up the lane. I bolted the doors, because he had told me to, for otherwise I would not have thought of it. It grew dark rapidly, and the thunder began to peal heavily, while the wind rose and the flashes of lightning grew more livid and frequent. I went out to the east parlor and looked to the south, but the sudden lighting up of the sky and the falling darkness that not interest me long. I could not see our very well, either, as the honey suckles covered the windows. The large mirror reflected me as I turned away to cross the room, and I stopped a moment with natural vanity, for I was young and fair enough to look upon.

I let all my four fall loose, and wound it in long shining curls over my fingers. It certainly did look trandsome, for it was very thick and fell below my waist, and terror, but I neither screamed nor moved. I heard a search through all the rooms below. My heart beat till I thought that eyery bound must be audible; heard voices -one voice the Raven's. I knew that harsh croak. It told me nothing. The lovely day. Just after our early breakfast face had revealed all to me. The man must have learned in some unaccountable in carriages and on horseback, and yelling way of the bag of gold, and learned, too. when here in the morning, that I was to be alone. It was all plain to me now. He had returned and had brought accomplices. I thanked God that the panel was close shut, I knew it for no ray of light came through, "She must be up here," said the Raven, "and we'll soon have her."

"I'll warrant she's here, and I'll wring her neck if she makes a noise about it." But the thorough search was ended and the voices grew very angry and full of frightful oaths and threatenings. They sat down on the garret stairs to hold a parley. A spider ran across my face. A spider puts me in mortal fear. It was with a great effort that I kept from screaming. "Come," croaked the Raven, "let us go and get the silver, that will be something -

"Shoot her by the next flash!" cried one.

My flying feet struck loose boards. I was passing directly ever an old, unused well, very deep, and it gave back a hollow, resonant sound. we all went in. Father said calmly : "We will take a lantern, Thomas, and look around out of doors a little." I knew they would go to the old well.

I stood and looked out of the window and saw the gleam of the lantern as it moved. In a few minutes they came back. "One of them is dead," said my father,

"and the other lies at the bottom of the well and groans. The third has escaped," They laid boards across some barrels in the shed, and brought up the dead man and laid him on them. His comrade, who fell in the well, had shot him through the head as he plunged through the boards. His ugly face was ugher. It was the Raven. THE DANUBE, -The river Danube has figured largely in history for 2,000 years, and it again becomes the object to which the eyes of the world are turned. It furnished a highway for the Tucks in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries to penetrate Europe as far as Vienna, and in the days of the crusades it became an outlet for the religious cothusiasm of Europe to flow to the Holy Land. The Danube, from its source in Baden to the Black Sea, is 1,280 miles in length, and it drains, with its tributaries, an area of over 300,000 square miles. It passes through Bayaria, Austria, Hungary, forms the boundary between Hungary and Servia to the Carpathian mountains, where it separates Roumania and Balgaria, and passes into the Black Sea through several mouths, the principal one being that of Silina. The Danube is navigable for steamers as far as Ulm in Bayaria. At Nicopolis in the fourteenth century 100,000 Christians were driven by the Furks into the Danube, and in the fifteenth century 40,000 Turks were slain on its shores at the siege of Belgrade.

A Night in a Japanese Inn.

We entered the village, which was once a city containing 1,000,000 inhabitants, and put up at a native hotel, kept in native style. Obeying the custom of undressing the feet, we passed many guests sliting on mats and making the chopsticks fly in a way that would make a Yankee envious even in a railroad eating house. Up stairs we went, and were shown into a room whose walls consisted merely of paper, partitioning one room from another, but which were scrupulously clean. Ordering supper and some native wine, we were quickly served by a rather good looking maid .-While waiting the result of our order, we were served with some "tit bu" pastry and with some sackee; also a bowl containing live coals, together with pipes; after which, giving us time for a smoke, the courses began with fish, not cooked enough for our taste; then eggs, clucken, sweet polatoes, rice, and tea.

No bread was served us nor butter; but, as the tea was remarkably fine, and as the eggs, tho' small were seasoned with rock salt, we made a good meal, rendered awkward by tack of experience in using the chopsticks, which were pencilshaped, and used by ends, the guests meanwhile peeping through the partitions and giggling at our frantic efforts to eat gracefully. While eating supper, the Governor of the place scut a ustable to obtain our name and residence that we might be under police protection, we being the first white men that ever spent a night in the place. Supper being over, we took a short walk through the town, and as there were many pilgrims in the place who had never seen a Cancassion before, we were the "observed of all observers," especially our friend, an Englishman, who is six feet, and was a giant among them. Going back to the hotel, our friend asked us if we wished a both and shampoo. A REMARKABLE DREAM. - The accuracy of the following may be telled on in all its particulars: Two ladies, sisters, had been for several days in attendance upon their -severe, and protracted; but not considered as attended with any danger. At the same time, one of them had borrowed a watch from a female friend, in consequence of her own being under repair. The watch tached, on account of family associations; and some anxiety was expressed that it might not meet with any injury. The sisters were sleeping together, in a room communicating with that of their brother, when the elder of them a woke in a state of great agitation; and having aroused the other, told her that she had had a trightful dream, "I dreamt," she said, "that Mary's watch stopped :- and that, when I told you of the circumstance, you replied, 'Mach worse than that has happened, for James's breath has stopped also?" —naming their brother who was ill. To quiet her agitation, the younger sister immediately got up, and found the brother sleeping quietly; and the watch which had been carefully put up in a drawer, going correctly. The following night the very same dream ocentred, followed by similar agitation, which was again composed in the same manner; -the brother being again found in a quiet sleep, and the watch going well. On the following morning, soon after the family breakfasted, one of the sisters was sitting by her brother, while the other was writing a note in the adjoining room. When her note was ready for being scaled, she was proceeding to take out for this purpose the watch alluded to, which had been put by in her writing-desk, when the was astonished to find it had stopped; and, at the same instant she heard a scream of intense distress from her sister in the other considered as going on favorably, had been had just breathed his last.

THE FIRST WATCH -At first the watch was about the size of a dessert plate. It had weights, and was used as a "pocket clock." The earliest known use of the modern name occurs in the record of 1552, which mentions that Edward VI, had "one larum or watch of iron, the case being like. wise of 'rongilt, and two plommets of lead " The first watches may readily be supposed to have been of rune execution. The first great improvement, the substitution of springs for weights, was in 1650. The earliest springs were not coiled, but only straight pieces of steel. Early watches had only one hand, and being wound up twice a day, they could not keep time nearer than fifteen or twenty minutes in the Lacive hours. The dials were of silver or brass; the cases had no crystals, bot opened at the back and front, and were four or five aloged and truthful side of her longue cominches in diameter. A plain watch cost
