A CONTRAST. Which are the better classes ?-we shall see

[Written or the CARBRIA FREEMAN.]

If you and I can on this point agree. The merit of the man is Heaven's own test, Without regard to frieze or satin vest; And he whose life and actions shine forth clear-Who serves his country and his God doth fear-We will compare with all that other train Whose souls and lives are swallowed up in gain; Whose every action tends to self, And stops at nothing which augments his pelf. A thousand happy homes he would destroy Before his flesh would bear one small annoy; Before his flesh would bear one small annoy;

Nor God nor man regards, but gluts his wish, As one great shark doth swallow fish. He strives and grasps at all within his ken, And occupies the, space designed for ten. With envious eye he views the poor man's cot. And hates the peace which crowns his humble

To cheat, to cozen, or to undermine, To cheat, to cozen, or to undermine, Is just as much his nature as to dine. An enemy he lives to every man, And cares for none but those who nid his plan. When frost or blight doth nip the tender grain, The highest price ne'er gluts his greed for gain. Berates the beggat for a tramp or fraud, Forgetting Lazarus, the triend of God. Who is with festering cores at Divers' mate

Who iay with festering sores at Dives' gate, The hungry dog his sympathizing mate: E'en Lazarus, who begged from day to day, And whom the Lord raised from the fetic clay.

Full-fed, he wallows through the world and dies,

His parting soul prest by the poor man's sighs; Nor has one Godly act graced his career, But on himself has centered every fear.

. The other kind of man we'll now review, Who lives his life to God and virtue true. To help his neighbor is his heart's desire-To help his neighbor is his heart's desire— His country's peril sets his soul on fire. He flings his life into the trembling scale, And holdly stands where selfish cowards quail. Upon God's hallowed day his steps he bends Up to the house where soul-born praise ascends; There, kindred souls with his do seek the way Which heads to realing of excelasting day. Which leads to realms of everlasting day His gross, brute instincts under stern com-mand.

Which clog his journey to the better land. Then through the week his days are spent in

Sacques & Cloaks II Understeam

"All that, gentlemen, is undoubtly extremely interesting, but will you allow me to say that the whole of the singular accidents of which you have spoken are as nothing compared to a railroad catastrophe which happened some years ago in Eng-land, and at which I was unwillingly present ?" Very naturally this beginning awakened our interest, and we entreated him to go on. "Willingly, .gentlemen," said our traveling companion. "As I said before, it was in England, about five years ago. I had taken the Bristol train at 6 o'clock in the morning-a morning that I shall never forget-for a little village some twenty miles off. We had been going along very smoothly, when, from the railroad carriage in which I was placed-the first on the train-the noise of a violent gearrel reached me. I looked out of the window. The noise came from the locomotive, where a fight had begun between the engineer and fireman. I learned later the cause of the dispute, which, I might as well say now, arose from jealously of some woman. It had long burned in their hearts ; and now that the explosion had come it was violent. "I was, as I say, gentlemen, at the was fleeing for her life through the winter's window looking out, when the noise reful steamboat accident out there two years then said to me, "Let me have a room, for him the house, and finding that of no night. THE EDITORS.

THOSE HAPPY, GUILELESS, PEACEEUL, GE-NIAL SOULS.

The editors of Indiana had a grand reunion at Lafayette the other day, and I was constrained to stop and join them, for verily were they not going to open a keg of nails and cut a melon. Happy, innocent, guileless men, these editors. How little they know of the world and its sordid cares; how little they know of its wrangling strifes and its noisy wars ; how little they see of its irredeemable and fluctuating currencies ; how sublimely, magnificently seldom do they light upon the combination of its safe lock. Ab, men of busy, heartless, money getting world, editors have no money. We have something better. We have calm, unmoved and unmovable, sleeping consciences, that you couldn't quicken with a stroke of lightning. What priceless treasure is such a conscience. Journalism is the profession without jealousy. 1 don't believe there is a profession in the world so free from jealousy as this. Look at musical people. They are the worst in the lot. Music hath charms to sooth a savage, but it has no power to tame the ferocity of people who play, and sing, and teach it. An opera company, without a black eye is an unheard of wonder. All through the opera season the frightened air is full of the loud wranglings of warring tenor and suprano, contraito and basso .- Every mail brings to STORY OF & BAILWAY ADVENTURE THAT our ears the crash of another footstool Christine Nilsson has kicked over. And a church choir-why, I never knew but one There were four of us in one of the cars choir that didn't have a chronic row on its on the Lyons Railroad. And that one broke up the get exactly how we fell into conversation, first Sunday. One of the first indications but, at any rate, by the time we had got to of a revival in the church is when the so-Villeneuve the conversation was general on prano and alto get on speaking terms the subject of railroad accidents. We had with each other. And at a musical lestiall told stories of more or less interest, garval, did you ever notice how the chorus nished with the greatest amount of danger stood back and glared at the solo? It is possible, when the only one among us who awful. But with us there is none of that had not yet furnished a budget of advenfeeling. We love each other. And when, in the course of our political duties, as standard bearers, we feel constrained to call an esteemed contemporary a "measoreless liar," he knows we mean business, and if he is a man who will get mad at a little trivial thing like that, he comes over with a club and mashes us, and that is the end of it. We may have occasion to denounce him, in the heat and passion of the conflict, as a 'moral hyena, whose foul and festering chops drip gall and aqua fortis, a mocker and destroyer of the truth, upon whose vicious lips the dear, pure truth, if ever it could spring from a heart so blackened and stained with crime, turus to ashes and bitterness before it can be uttered," We may feel it our duty to call an esteemed contemporary a "paltering slave to a ring of petty tyrants," "an unprincipled scoundrel, whose grovelling carcass, wallowing in the cesspool of political corruption, steeped to his thievish eyes in abhorrent partisan infamy, pursues its nefarious traffic to the very shadow of the mocking gallows it has cheated too long." We get mad at these things sometimes, dreadful mad, awful mad. But we get over it, especially if the other man is the biggest. When the jealousy of Union generals was bringing disgrace and defeat on the Union arms in Virginia, the newspaper correspondents hung together and carried on the war and won victories and slaughtered rebels by the column, double leaded brevier. People love us for this unselfishness. Our tranquil lives imprint upon our faces the beautiful and tender expression which people always remember so long after they meet an editor, and which makes them go home shuddering, to dream that very night that they met a man who had starved to death, and had erawled out of his grave to steal a pretzel and couldn't find his way back. We cat well, and we don't care at whose expense ; we dress well, we sleep well, and we drink-well only tolerable, only tolerable .- Burlington Hawkeye.

A DIPLOMATIC ASSWER .- The old man imith, of Richfield, is a self sufficient sort of old fellow, and prides himself upon his riding abilties. One day he espied his young hopeful leading a colt to water rather gingerly, and remarked :

"Why on earth don't you ride that beast?"

"I'm' fraid to; 'fraid he'll throw me." "Bring that hoss here," snapped the old man.

The colt was urged up to the fence, and braced on one side by the boy while the old man climbed on the rails and stocked himself on the colt's back. Then he was let go, and the old gentleman rode proudly off. Paralyzed by fear the colt went slowly for about twenty rods without a demonstration, Then like lightning his four legs bunched together, his back bowed like a viaduct you're smart. Do you see that jug over | arch and the old man shot up in the air, turued seven separate and distinct somersaults, and lit on the small of his back in the middle of the road, with both legs twisted around his neck. Hastening to him the young hopeful anxiously inquired: "Did it hurt you, pa?"

The old man rose' slowly, shook out the knots in his legs, brushed the dust from his ears and hair and rubbing his elbows, growled .

"Well, it didn't do me a dum bit of good. You go home."-Cleveland Herald.
