LEAVING THE HOMESTEAD.

O. must we leave the dear old place,
And bonny Spring so near?

Each spot is hallowed by some trace
To recollection dear.
The apple tree.
Where sported free
The birds in Summer time,
The shrubs and flowers,
Fed by the showers,
Fed by the showers,
The purple-laden vine
And must we leave this cosy room,
Blest by familiar the?
O, cruel fortune:—wretched doom!—
I thought me here to die!
Here warmly shone
The Summer s sun,
Till, in the golden West,
His level ray,
At close of day,
Called chattering birds to rest.
Here lived your mother happy days,
And in this house she died.
You sperted here in childish ways
From morn till eventide.
There, on the rag, beside the stove,
Ind doze the purring puss;
And slyly from his corner, there,
Did peep the tiny mouse.
OR puss did try,
With watchful, he
Did frisk in glee,
And scamper, swift, away.
Alas' how every little thing
Come up into my mind!
Each recollection bears a sting,
With pleasing thought combined;
For this dear spot.
And hallowed cot,
For sye, we leave behind,
When Summer called to lusy tofl,
Through open window, there
Came dronting bee intent to spoil
The posies growing, rare,
Each nectured cup he visited,
And stole it's hunded store.
Then off, amid the petals hid,
With pollen covered o'er.
By rich aroma luiled, he'd hie
And doze awhile in sweet.
Till, rousing up, away he'd hie
To seatal hive retreat;
Where, safe, he'd stay

And doze swittle in sweet.

Till, rousing up, away he'd hie
To social hive retreat:
Where, safe, he'd stay
All night, till day
Call'd him, auxain, to ream,
As happy, he,
As here, were we,
When this was our loved home.
But we must find another spot
To rest the weary head:
Yet ne'er can mem'ries be forgot
Of joys forever field.
How cosy here the evening meal
Of healthful, homely food,
Each happy face displayed the seal
Stamped by the fear of God.
His blessing craved,
All pride was waived,
We heartily enjoying

All pride was waived,
We heartly enjoying
The healthul food
From garden-rood
With appetite uncloying.
Here we were wont at eventide
To gather round in prayer,
And were we ever yet denied
A Heavenly Futher's care?
A happy band,
We hand in hand,
Enjoying our home together,
And naught did cloy
Our social joy

And naught did cloy
Our social joy
Each lived to serve the other.

Tis over now, and gone for naught
Is all our patient toil?
The years have flown, with burthens traught
And left no worldly specify
But we have lived in happiness,—
Emplying life's fruitton;—
Perchance our lives may weigh no less
Though wrecked each fond ambition,
We all knew how,
With sweating brow,
To till the fertile sell;—
So naught we'll four
For centing your,
Nor from our fate recoil.

Yet, I thought to live on the dear old place
Till the sands of life were run.—
For it, greets my eye like a freendly face,
When bathed in the morning sun.
This a dreary thing, when a man is old,
To seek for another home:
O, the new retreat seems dark and cold,
Though desked in the Summer-bloom!
But I'm growing old and my time I'll bide
To be gathered among my race:—
Farowell, farewell to the old fireside!
Farewell to the dear old place!

IN MEMORIUM. Mrs. Engrandum Melition, mother of Rev. Father McHugh, died from dropsy of the heart on the 8th of the present month, strong thened by the last sacraments of the Catholic Church, at the home of her son in Wilmore, this county, after having lived to the advanced age of so years. The deceased was born in the Country Fermaniagh, Ireland, in the year 1789, came to this county with her husband in 1822, and lived for ten years in Centre county, this State, after which they moved to Cambria, since when the family has continued to reside in the vicinity of Wilmore.

It is our consolution to know that even in a world so forgetful of God there are many, many thousands living good and saintly lives—lives which are indeed a perpetual prayer—and to God give continual praise. As a toward their lives are prelonged that they may continue to sanctify themselves more and more, and may bless by their good example those who surround them. We may truly say that Mrs. McHugh was one of these. She was a saint of the hidden life. Her faith in God was beautiful in its simplicity, trusting lu Him and His revelations as the little child confides in its loving parent. She raised a large family and had the pleasure of seeing them humbly practice faithfully the faith she loved so well. But the crowding glary of her salvation of her soul. She bore here sufferings with truly Christian fartitude and resignation. Her mind was clear to the last, and she fully realized her condition and waited for the moment of dissolution to arrive, and when it did come how gloriously exemplified was the fact that Death has no terror for the good, who may be said to be only going to see God.

We have not seen such a large funeral for many a day. A great many of the clergy wars in the sanctuary. The last prayers over the remains were read by Rev. I. Boyle, of Ebensburg, after which the remains were laid in their final resting place in the graveyard adjoining the church to await the great resurrection. May she rest in peace.

In Commissioner Gurley would permit the Freemen man to slieb from the county treasury a sum of money, say in the neighborhood of Sio, we have no doubt that paper would say nice things about him. Fiberoburg Hereld.

Just so; and now by the same parity of reasoning Commissioner Gurley is obliged to submit to the hypocritical handations of a man who loves him, his polities, and something else we might mention, about as much as the devil is said to love holy water, and thing else we might mention, about as much as the devil is said to love holy water, and that simply because the aforesaid Gurley permitted our anniable friend up-street to fileh $30 from the county treasury when half or less than half the amount would have brought the same answer.
