A Wonderftl. Story of Brook. Trout.—In the Bee, a busy little newspaper that improves each shining hour in the city of Sacramento, Cal., to gather the very honey of the news, there one day in the last month appeared a story about some brook trout. The Bee got the story-from Mr. Redding, who is paid by the State to take care of all good fish. Mr. Redding says that at the food paid by the State to take care of all good fish. Mr. Redding says that at the food of Mount Shasta, near the Sacramento river, he made a small pond in which to hatch trout. The water ran into the pond through a spout (or as he calls it, "flume"), and this spout was built for a long distance to a spring on the anountain side. The spout crosses a deep glen when about two hundred feet from the pond, and in the bottom of the glen runs a free stream of water that empties into the river. Now one sunny day Mr. Redding saw several trout swim out of the pond and into the spout, which is little fellows until they reached the part of the spont that was over the deep glen. When they reached that point they leaped over the side of the spont and dropped into the water, below, swimming thence into the river. He watched fourteen fish do the trick in one day. Every one of them made the jump in safety. It is strange that the fish should have known just where to jump at, for had they attempted to leap from the spout at any other point they would have been killed by falling on would have been killed by falling on the rocks.

From Donaldson's last to be drowned to be used as a final knowledge of gas, and his mode of managing his balloon, we might infer that he found that he must trail upon the water, as he was compelled to do but a very large of the found that he must trail upon the water as he was compelled to do but a very large of the sunday letter of the found that he must trail upon the water as he was compelled to do but a very large of the sunday letter of the found that he must trail upon the water as he was compelled to do but a very large of the sunday letter of the sunday of the very decive of the sunday letter of the sun few weeks before on Lake Ontario, and that they prepared for the worst by throwing out all ballast, then their boots, and to meet the last they put on their life-preservers. The basket, coming down into the water, filled, and was virtually at anchor. The hurricane and furious wind would soon tear the balloon to pieces, and the two men, left at the mercy of the angry waves, must soon have succumbed to a watery grave.

Finally, after skirmishing within thirty feet of the dark waves for a distance of the dark waves for a distance of not less than fifty miles, and perhaps more, they were out of danger of drowning, but a new peril was before them. The hurricane and forest which skirted the lake, and threat forest which skirted the lake, and threat the milmb from limb. Mr. Gager had thrown out the anchor, a heavy iron one, with three hooks, each an inch and a quarter in thickness. So the mercy of the angry waves, must soon have succumbed to a watery grave.

The great serial voyage from the Mississippi to the Atlantic coast began on July 1, 1859. It was the longest trip ever made in a balloon. The adventurers were John La Mountain, a noted aeronant, O. A. Gager, John Wise and its terrible strength wond them down and fling them to the ground. Wm. Hyde, of the St, Louis Republican, Mr. Hyde described the trip in a long.
