

HEADS WITHOUT BODIES.
Said Dr. Drury, a well-known physician and scientist of Columbus to the writer yesterday:
"Come with me and I will show you two of the most wonderful curiosities to be seen anywhere."
Without asking any questions the young man of the Connecticut got into the doctor's carriage at his building, and after an hour's ride got out at the Franklin County Infirmary, situated in the southeastern suburbs of this city. Passing around the infirmary buildings, which are pleasantly surrounded by trees, grape-vines and the like to the rear of the buildings, the curiosities were reached. Seated in a chair upon a raised platform of the ordinary height of boys of that age. The head and face were the first looked at, of course. The head was large and crowned magnificently with intense black hair. The face was unusually round and full, complexion sallow, the eyes very large, black, brilliant and intelligent. Altogether the face depicted extreme good health. But when the head and face had been examined and the body and limbs. There were none, almost literally. The large hairy head was the living head of a shadowy body, an actual skeleton. This thin shirt and pants did not hide the bones. Drawing up his shirt stole the shadow of an arm was revealed. Every bone could be distinctly seen. This transparent skin was drawn around the body of the skeleton. The largest part of the arm, the broom, was scarcely as large as the writer's two smallest fingers. The skin also adhered closely to the joints at the elbow and wrist. The hand was held over the body of the shirt the chest bones, ribs and other parts of the frame could be felt plainly. The same condition was observed everywhere. The hand was spinned by the writer's thumb and forefinger. His feet, which were dressed in loose cotton stockings, were like devoid of muscle and flesh. There was no trace of the blue tracing of the veins, and in the shades cast by the vital parts. All these parts are plainly discernible with the aid of a microscope.
