AN ARGUMENT FOR LIFE. It was a sharp fresty moonlight night, but the fresh waters of Green River had not yet been chilled, and they flowed rapidly onward, with confused murmurings, as if impatient to become part of the great Ohie.

It was as late as ten o'clock when Robert Craig, a young lawyer, came upon a bridge that spanned a branch of the Green River. In Central Kentucky. He was afoot, and he walked with a very light step, because his heart was light. He had been successful in the most important suit he had ever been engaged in. He had pleaded his own case, in his favor was simply Miss Mary Lane, the | finished handsomest girl in the neighborhood, and as good as she was beautiful. She had promised to be his wife.

But Robert Craig was destined to plead another case that very night, and before a Thursday night, between 10 and 11 o'clock, less lenient court. He had no warning of this, however, when he stepped upon the bridge and walked out over the clear waters, muttering congratulations to himself.

"Yes, I'm the lucklest man living!" he soliloquized, as he reached the middle of the I am unarmed.

The bridge was not a covered one and he stopped to lean over the railing at one side, and looked down into the sparkling waters that quivered in the bright moonlight.

"Yes, I'm the luckiest man living!" he repeated, quite aloud, after he had stood a -Ha! ha! ba!" full minute gazing upon the flowing river. "Don't be too sure of that." said a voice Robert Craig, calm as ever. behind him.

Robert Craig turned with a start, and saw a tall man standing at the opposite side of the bridge, leveling a rifle upon him. He dead?" seemed very cool and deliberate in his manand lev.
