

ambled a reaman. ... THE ...

Henry Shaffer, of Johnston, who lost both legs by an accident some two years ago, has become blind and deaf, and it is feared that neither sight nor hearing can be restored. Poor and helpless, the Johnston Tribune says he maintains a steady cheerfulness that is surprising.

On Friday evening last, at the Yoder hill coal mines on Stony creek, opposite Johnston, Richard Wilkins, a boy fourteen years of age, happening to be near where a dispute was in progress between a man and a woman, was struck by a falling rock, and some of the male drivers, ran to the scene of the quarrel, and just as he reached the place where the rock was standing the latter struck him on the head, immediately back of the ear, with what is known as the "sore" of a pick, which O'Neill held in his hand. At first the wound was thought to be of a very serious nature, but on Monday morning, however, he was much better, and there seemed to be no doubt that he would recover. O'Neill was bound over by Judge Travers to appear at the March term of the court, and was held for his appearance at court to answer the charge of assaulting the latter. All three were brought to jail on Tuesday night, neither of them having been able to receive bail, and were held until they could be removed to the county jail.

On Friday evening last, at the Yoder hill coal mines on Stony creek, opposite Johnston, Richard Wilkins, a boy fourteen years of age, happening to be near where a dispute was in progress between a man and a woman, was struck by a falling rock, and some of the male drivers, ran to the scene of the quarrel, and just as he reached the place where the rock was standing the latter struck him on the head, immediately back of the ear, with what is known as the "sore" of a pick, which O'Neill held in his hand. At first the wound was thought to be of a very serious nature, but on Monday morning, however, he was much better, and there seemed to be no doubt that he would recover. O'Neill was bound over by Judge Travers to appear at the March term of the court, and was held for his appearance at court to answer the charge of assaulting the latter. All three were brought to jail on Tuesday night, neither of them having been able to receive bail, and were held until they could be removed to the county jail.

On Friday evening last, at the Yoder hill coal mines on Stony creek, opposite Johnston, Richard Wilkins, a boy fourteen years of age, happening to be near where a dispute was in progress between a man and a woman, was struck by a falling rock, and some of the male drivers, ran to the scene of the quarrel, and just as he reached the place where the rock was standing the latter struck him on the head, immediately back of the ear, with what is known as the "sore" of a pick, which O'Neill held in his hand. At first the wound was thought to be of a very serious nature, but on Monday morning, however, he was much better, and there seemed to be no doubt that he would recover. O'Neill was bound over by Judge Travers to appear at the March term of the court, and was held for his appearance at court to answer the charge of assaulting the latter. All three were brought to jail on Tuesday night, neither of them having been able to receive bail, and were held until they could be removed to the county jail.

On Friday evening last, at the Yoder hill coal mines on Stony creek, opposite Johnston, Richard Wilkins, a boy fourteen years of age, happening to be near where a dispute was in progress between a man and a woman, was struck by a falling rock, and some of the male drivers, ran to the scene of the quarrel, and just as he reached the place where the rock was standing the latter struck him on the head, immediately back of the ear, with what is known as the "sore" of a pick, which O'Neill held in his hand. At first the wound was thought to be of a very serious nature, but on Monday morning, however, he was much better, and there seemed to be no doubt that he would recover. O'Neill was bound over by Judge Travers to appear at the March term of the court, and was held for his appearance at court to answer the charge of assaulting the latter. All three were brought to jail on Tuesday night, neither of them having been able to receive bail, and were held until they could be removed to the county jail.

On Friday evening last, at the Yoder hill coal mines on Stony creek, opposite Johnston, Richard Wilkins, a boy fourteen years of age, happening to be near where a dispute was in progress between a man and a woman, was struck by a falling rock, and some of the male drivers, ran to the scene of the quarrel, and just as he reached the place where the rock was standing the latter struck him on the head, immediately back of the ear, with what is known as the "sore" of a pick, which O'Neill held in his hand. At first the wound was thought to be of a very serious nature, but on Monday morning, however, he was much better, and there seemed to be no doubt that he would recover. O'Neill was bound over by Judge Travers to appear at the March term of the court, and was held for his appearance at court to answer the charge of assaulting the latter. All three were brought to jail on Tuesday night, neither of them having been able to receive bail, and were held until they could be removed to the county jail.

On Friday evening last, at the Yoder hill coal mines on Stony creek, opposite Johnston, Richard Wilkins, a boy fourteen years of age, happening to be near where a dispute was in progress between a man and a woman, was struck by a falling rock, and some of the male drivers, ran to the scene of the quarrel, and just as he reached the place where the rock was standing the latter struck him on the head, immediately back of the ear, with what is known as the "sore" of a pick, which O'Neill held in his hand. At first the wound was thought to be of a very serious nature, but on Monday morning, however, he was much better, and there seemed to be no doubt that he would recover. O'Neill was bound over by Judge Travers to appear at the March term of the court, and was held for his appearance at court to answer the charge of assaulting the latter. All three were brought to jail on Tuesday night, neither of them having been able to receive bail, and were held until they could be removed to the county jail.

On Friday evening last, at the Yoder hill coal mines on Stony creek, opposite Johnston, Richard Wilkins, a boy fourteen years of age, happening to be near where a dispute was in progress between a man and a woman, was struck by a falling rock, and some of the male drivers, ran to the scene of the quarrel, and just as he reached the place where the rock was standing the latter struck him on the head, immediately back of the ear, with what is known as the "sore" of a pick, which O'Neill held in his hand. At first the wound was thought to be of a very serious nature, but on Monday morning, however, he was much better, and there seemed to be no doubt that he would recover. O'Neill was bound over by Judge Travers to appear at the March term of the court, and was held for his appearance at court to answer the charge of assaulting the latter. All three were brought to jail on Tuesday night, neither of them having been able to receive bail, and were held until they could be removed to the county jail.

On Friday evening last, at the Yoder hill coal mines on Stony creek, opposite Johnston, Richard Wilkins, a boy fourteen years of age, happening to be near where a dispute was in progress between a man and a woman, was struck by a falling rock, and some of the male drivers, ran to the scene of the quarrel, and just as he reached the place where the rock was standing the latter struck him on the head, immediately back of the ear, with what is known as the "sore" of a pick, which O'Neill held in his hand. At first the wound was thought to be of a very serious nature, but on Monday morning, however, he was much better, and there seemed to be no doubt that he would recover. O'Neill was bound over by Judge Travers to appear at the March term of the court, and was held for his appearance at court to answer the charge of assaulting the latter. All three were brought to jail on Tuesday night, neither of them having been able to receive bail, and were held until they could be removed to the county jail.