ONE MEAL A DAY. Dr. C. B. Page sends the Journal of Chemistry an account of experiments made to show that one meal a day is enough for a man : "S. N. S., twenty-eight years old, resolved to adopt the one meal system, and did so, leaving off meat and all condiments, as salt and pepper, and eating chiefly wheatmeal bread and fruit, the bread made from ansifted meat, and mixed with water only, no salt or breadraising devices-unleavened. Within seven months his weight increased from one hundred and forty five pounds to one hundred and seventy pounds, and his strength of both body and mind increased in proportion. His labor had been severe; he is a machinist and inventor, working ten hours every day, and doing a great deal of practical and profitable thinking at the same time, It is now a full year since he came to one meal, and the weight gained has been maintained, and his health perfect. During the last winter, for the purpose of testing the sufficiency of one meal of pure food for the most trying labor, he worked in an iron foundry for three months, and notwithstanding the extreme and frequent changes of weather incident to the work, on cold mornings with the mercury below zero, and in the afternoon at 120 degrees above, and all hands sweating like rain, he had not a 'cold' for the winter, and was the only employe thus exempt. He had been formerly subject to frequent attacks of the same disease. His daily ration consists of six ounces to nine ounces (according to labor) of Graham flour, besides fruit sufficient to supply all the liquids necessary—half a dozen apples or their equivalent in other fruit. He is rarely thirsty, but sometimes if too little fruit is taken at meal time he takes a small draught of water in the course of the day. This meal is taken at night, after entire recovery from fatigue, usually at about seven o'clock. buring the month of May, 1881, he gained sixty hours, or six full days, working right through to midnight, and taking his 'breakfast' after a short rest before retiring. No man in his employ had gained so much time. He has occasion but has invariably experienced a loss of weight and strength. 'My own experience goes far to prove either the brain or muscle-worker. I am now taking but one meal a day, and find myself perfectly nourished, weight and strength maintained, on about 14 to the mastication of which I devote an weighing about fourteen ounces, without either butter or milk, chewed deliberately and thoroughly dissolved by the juices of the mouth, will sustain me much better than when eaten warm with butter or milk or both together added, and eaten as fast as one naturally eats hot rolls and butter and bread and milk. Considering the manner in which people generally bolt their food, it is not trange that a large portion of it fails of digestion.

I could not make the last one simple enough to give me complete rest at night, but now, when rested from my day's labor. I can cat my full vegetable meal and sleep like a well fed babe.

THE HOME BOCTOR.

Dr. Fleck, a somewhat celebrated Dresden chemist, attributes the production of pimples and inflammation on the forchead of some persons, in hot weather, to the presence of fat or fatty acids in the leather lining of hats. By experiment he has lately shown that the fat is contained in all leathers, and, although small in quantity, is sufficient to produce the result in question. To avoid the unpleasant effects he recommends rubbing the greasy leather with burnt magnesia.

To cure bunions, use pulverized salt petre and sweet oil. Obtain, at a druggist's five or six cents' worth of saltpetre; put it into a bottle with sufficient olive oil to dissolve it; shake up well, and rub the inflammed joints night and morning, and more frequently if painful. When an individual is reported to have died of disease of the beart, we are in the habit of regarding it as an inevitable event, as something which could not have been foreseen or prevented, and it is too much the habit when persons suddenly fall down dead, to report the heart as the cause; this silences all inquiry and investigation, and saves the trouble and inconvenience of a post mortem. A truer report would have a tendency to save many lives. It is through a report of the disease of the heart that many an opium eater is let off into the grave that covers at once his folly and his crime; the brandy-drinker, too, quietly slides around the corner thus, and is heard of no more; in short, this report of the heart is the mantle of charity, which the polite coroner and sympathetic physician throws around the traves of generous people. At a scienlific congress at Strasburg, it was reported, that of sixty-six persons who had suddenly died, an immediate and faithful post mortem showed that only two persons had any heart affections whatever-one sudden death in thirty-three from disease of the heart. Nine out of sixty die of apoplexy-one out of every seven-while forty six, more than two out of three, died of lung affection, half of them from congestion of the lungs, that is, the langs were so full of blood that they could not work; there was not room enough for air to get in to support life. It is, then, or considerable could be supported but the awfal consequences of Self-Abuse may be that they could not work; there was not room enough for air to get in to suppractical interest, to know some of the common every day causes of this congestion of the lungs, a disease which, the figures above being true, kills three times as many persons, at short warning as apoplexy and heart disease together. Cold feet, tight shoes, light clothing, costive bowels, sitting still until chilled through after having warmed up by labor or a long, hasty walk ; going to suddenly from a close, heated room, as a unger, or listener, or speaker, while the body is weakened by continual application, or abstinence, or heated by a long address; these are the frighful causes of sudden death in the form of congestion of the lungs; but which, being falsely reported as disease of the se of Memory, Spormatorchoea, Impotency, Inantery Emissions, Francture Old Age, caused

It is not alone because of the growing scarcity of timber that the destruction of our forests, particularly in the thickly settled sections of the east, is to be deprecated. It has long been a popular belief that forest exercise a decidedly favorable influence on climate and water supply, and this belief is fully sanctioned by the results of a series of experiments recently made by certain distinguished French scientists. In the last issue of the American Naturalist Dr. J. M. Anders gives an interesting summing up of the latest researches on the subject. Forests influence the atmosphere mainly by their effect on its general humidity . An evaporation of moisture from both earth and trees takes place constantly, The evaporation is greater from open soil than from woodland, but the difference is far more than made up by what is called "transpiration," of leaves of the trees. The quantity of the insensible vapor that is given off through the leaves is immense, amounting to one and a quarter ounces to the square foot of leaf surface. Painstaking experiment have enabled those studying the matter to make an approximate estimate of the comparative amounts of vapor given off by earth surface and leaf surface. They have calculated that a square foot of soil sets free about six times as much moisture as a square foot of leaf. The surface is, however, many times greater than soil surface -- twelve times greater, the scienporation takes place from forests as from open land. When the wood of the century is cut away, therefore, other things being equal, two-thirds of the moisture giving material of the atmosphere is gone with it. Hence the long and fearful droughts on lands bare of trees. Commenting upon the live reviving exhalation from trees, the Naturdist writer says : What an harmonious adaption of means to an end does nature exhibit here—plant life atomizing tons and tons of watery vapor into the surrounding medium, even during time of drought, and this same vapor in turn protecting huxuriant vegetation from evil consequences of terrestrial radiation. Moist air during winter tends to moderate extreme cold; during the summer, on the contrary, it tends to cool the dranghts; hence forests by moistening the air in summer gives us cool and delightful breezes; another means by which for means to an end does nature exhibit breezes; another means by which forests effect extremes of temperature." Forests moisten the air all about them. They create abundant dews and dews play no small part in forwarding vegetation. In the dryest season dew still refreshes the parched earth. Another benefit, and not the least to be considered is the good service belts of woodland do in protecting vegetation from storms and ley winds. It is very common now for enlightened farmers in the west and nortwest to plant dense rows of trees and hedges of evergreen along the north line of their orchards and grounds. The fact so far ascertained with certainty, are themselves, without one additional word, a sufficient comment on the ruinous folly that lays the axe of destruction at the root of our forest trees. They also point to the need of immediate forest planting in localities where a suf-

HOW CHEAPLY ONE CAN LIVE .-Bread after all is the cheapest diet one one can live on, and also the best. A story is told that shows just how cheap a man can live when he gets "down too much," figuratively and literally speak-ing, Colonel Flizgibbon was many years ago, colonial agent at London for the Canadian government, and was wholly dependent upon remittance from Canada for his support. On one occasion these remittances failed to arrive. and as there was no cable in those days he was compelled to write to his Canadian friends to know the reason of the delay. Meanwhile he had just one covereign to live upon. He found that he could live upon sixpence per day, or twelve and a balf cents of our moneyfour pennyworths' of bread, one pennywork of milk and one pennyworth of sugar. He made pudding of some of the bread and sugar, which served for breakfast, dinner and supper, the milk being reserved for the last meal. When his remittance arrived about a month afterward he had five shillings remaining of his sovereign, and he liked his frugal diet so well that he kept it up for over two years, possibly longer. Twelve cents a day is certainly a small amount to expend for food; but a man in Minnesota, about three years ago, worried through a whole on ten dollars. He lived on "johnny cake."

We know of a theological student in an Ohio who, sustained by grace, rice and corn-tread, lived thirteen weeks on seven dollars; but there were several good apple orchards near the college, and the farmers kept no dogs. It is not the necessities of life that costs much, but the luxuries; and it is with the major part of mankind as it was with with the Frenchman, who said that if he had the luxuries of life he could dispense with the nacessities. Mere living is cheap; but, as the hymnologist says, "it is not all of life to live,"-American

A NOVEL PLAN. - A correspondent from Connecticut to the Manchester Nos. 278, 280 and 282 Washington St Mirror says : When I moved from New York to my small farm, everything was new to the children. It was away from noise and bustle, and I thought they would soon get tired of farm life. I purchased a flock of hens, and as most of my time was spent away from home, I wanted the childrent to take care of them. They did well for a short time but soon grew weary. The thought came to me that I could get them interested by giving them part of the profits. We made a stock company of it. came the President, my wife the Vice President, my son the Treasurer, my daughter the Secretary. The book was kept in a regular business form. The meetings of the company were called to order by the President and reports submitted and important questions discussed, such as "how to break up setting hens," and "would the company be able to pay quarterly dividends," We all became very much interested in our company, and as it was very successful the children purchased all the stock of myself and wife, and ran the company themselves, they taking the whole management of the hens, and disposing of the eggs. It occupied their leisure time when not at school, it gave them a start for a business education, and now that the children are grown up and away from Lome, I look back and feel a satisfaction in the little trouble we went to, upon our household. And this leads me to say that it is our duty as parents co make our homes so pleasant that our children will not went to go away until they start for themselves in the battle of
