The facts of a recent case of somnambulism on the railroad cars in a Western State, and the subject's remarkable evasion of fatal consequences, are interesting. The train in the River Division, en route from Milwaukee to Minneapolis, had on board, among other passengers, one morning, a Mrs. Wright and her two sons. As the train approached Weaver, the elder of of the two sons, aged sixteen, fell asleep, and, after the train had left the station, and was moving at the rate of twenty miles per hour, arose from his seat, and, of course, unknown to himself, passed on to the platform, and stepped from the train.

His mother noticed him as he passed out, but thought nothing of it, and gave herself no uneasiness. Supposing he had gone into the next car, she began a search for him, but he was not to be found. The conductor was at once notified, and, after the cars had been slowly to the station.
