so exceedingly slim that one cannot help feeling a great deal of sympathy for him in the many trials and troubles through which he is marching to his coming death and burial. It is, at best, not a very comfortable thing to run for Governor. It involves the expenditure of a great deal of cash and energy in a very hot time in the year. When a candidate is bouyed up with a decent hope he may go into the fight quite cheerfully if he is of the kind that loves office, as he probably is, or he would not have been nominated. But when he has no hope at all his position must be unenviable. Beaver, it is true, pretends to be hopeful, and even bazards the prediction that he will have fifty thousand plurality. It is not possible to think that he believes what he says; he can't be such a fool, He must know that his position is desperate and be miserable accordingly. Of course his friends in the regular ranks try to keep his spirits up by assurince that they will put him through ; and of course they mean to if they can. There is no doubt that Senator Cameron and his supporters will do all they can to sustain what is a fight for their political existence. So far as money and management may avail to success they be freely and assiduously used. But in this exigency they won't go far enough, even if there were no mistakes made; and even this early in the campaign General Beaver has shown a woful lack of sagacity to say nothing of his venturing so near the truth as to say that his bors was a small man, meaning he says, physically, while every one thinks its true every way-he has just succeeded in arraying himself against the orderly element in the Clearfield coal region by sending his lieutenant over there to bail some of the law breaking Knights of Labor, thinking to secure the votes of that organization. Renouncing the World and Its Pleasures,

NOTABLE YOUNG LADY EXCHANGING RICH BRIDAL ROBES FOR A NUN'S HABIT.

A Baltimore telegram of the 23d inst. tells of an interesting religious ceremony which | ed from a window. Here took place in that city on the day indicated,

Miss Emily McTavish, the wealthy society young after obtaining a box containing nearly $100 worth of jewelry, was about to leave when he was detected by Emma Ryan, the doinestic, who caught him by the arm and held him while she called for help. The intruder made a thrust at the girl with a large knife, cutting her ciothing but she held on, screaming all the time for assistance. Finally the thief succeeded in escaping; but she had noticed his appearance so well that from her description a detective soon after arrested the culprit, and he was at once recognized by the placky girl.

as a novice, was yesterday invested with the nun's habit at that institution, adopting the name of Sister Mary Agnes. The ceremonies were parformed in the chapel, there being no one present in the chapel, there being no one present the except several members of her lamily and two or three fivited friends. These occupied seats at the chancel rail. The peculiarity of the ceremony was that another the astirant cor the nuns were in a small adjuning wing to the left of the altar, and separated from it by a neavy iron grating. In this place they were not visible from the chapel, proper, and had there been a large converged in present, only those who were close converged in present, only those who were close to chancel rail.

Impressive.

At the beginning of the ceremonies Father Fitzpatrick delivered a brief address to the religiouse.
He interrogated her as to her desire to enter the convent, asking it she was ready to embrace that which was the denth of her former life. To these questions her answers were firm and decided. The attending Sisters then carried the yearing religiouse away, and, after removing the welding sitter, replaced it with the nam's habit of dark cloth, and linen. Her hair was not cut, nor will it be until she takes the solemn vow a year hence.

a private fortune of over $500,000. THE Washington Post is authority for the expert, has received a patent for an inven

ment whereby the rays of the sun are reflect mon focus. Happening to direct the light same surface he noticed that the resultant neat was about doubled. He proceeded ducing wood to ashes and metal to a liquid state by simply concentrating upon them the trains from New York and Philadelphia mirrors with flat surfaces. The principle is an enexplainable one. It has never hither to been suspected that lapping one ray of The Post thus describes an experiment witnessed by one of its reporters :

"Forty innocent, guileless looking fifteen cent gilt frame mirrors, each three and three fourths inches by five and three-fourths inches, were arranged upon a frame propped up like an artistic oasel and bearing a striking resemblance thereto. Facing the easel was the fragment of what was once a barn door, also propped up and partly covored with a worn and laded sheet of zine that bord unmistakable evidences of having been turned through in several places. It was but the wonderful leature about the whole thing is the brilling of the light. Each mirror adds not only heat, but light. The forty mirrors produced a light more brilliant than an ordinary electric light.

Lost in the Woods.—A dispatch from Marquette, Mich., July 19, says:

The bodies of Mrz. Wilson and her son were leand yesterday morning in the woods within two miles of their house. Mr. Wilson left bome on June 18 to visit a neighbor, taking her son, aged a years, and a daughter, and I years, leaving a son, aged it, to take care of the house. Five days afterward the boy who was left at home made his way to the railroad, where his lather was at work, eightoen miles distant, and rejected that the mother had been alsool five days. Search was immediately begun, but no trace of the woman could be found.

Yesterday one of the railroad men who was ont hunting came upon she three lying on the ground shettered by the root of a failen iree. The mother and son were dead. The daughter was still alive, She said that in starting for a neighbor's house, a mile and a quarter distant, the mother mistook a deer trail for the path, and after wandering about for several drys without food, they came upon a cranberry march, and thereafter lived upon green frait. In order not to less ber way mack to the root of the fallen tree where they were found, the woman fore her dress into strips and tied the fragments to the trees were a leave.
