COAL TAR AS AN ANTISEPTIC.

Mr. James F. Clark, West Brownish, England, writing to the British Medical Journal, of the valuable qualities of coal-tar and its derivative, carbolic acid, as antiseptic, disinfectants, and as being very destructive to parasitic life, gives the following outlines of the purposes to which he considers them applicable, leaving farmers and others to draw their own conclusions as to what may be the best use to make of them in any particular case:
 "There is no doubt that the presence of carbolic acid in coal tar is the cause of its utility as a disinfectant, and as a preservative of animal tissues. It would be preferable if not essential, still there are many cases in which coal tar is quite as effective and far more easily applied. As an antiseptic it has been many cases of wounds being prevented from purifying or becoming infected by a timely application. When by neglect they have become putrid, or even in swarming with maggots, a smearing of two or three times has caused them to assume a healthy tone. Malignant sores, such as foot rot or foul in the hoof, are quickly brought to a healthy condition, and the disease is prevented from recurring, by continuing the application until the skin is replaced, as from the greasy nature of tar it forms a plaster on the wound preventing mud and dirt coming in contact which greatly impedes recovery.
 "As a disinfectant coal tar is very serviceable in all buildings in which stock are kept, and is very easily applied by painting with it all the wood work, or indeed walls as well, if light is not an object. All foul gases and objectionable smells, putrid and offensive, are quickly overcome and rendered harmless, and at the same time insects and parasites which usually infest such places are immediately destroyed. For great many purposes no doubt coal tar would be objectionable, and in such cases carbolic acid, in some of its forms is to be preferred.
 "As I have said, the acid is the effective principle of the tar and may be relied upon to serve all purposes thoroughly. As an antiseptic ointment for sores in exposed places on light colored animals or on pedicels which coal tar would look uncleanly or unsightly the acid, in varied proportions with lard, olive oil, or other suitable ointment as a basis, forms a most effective application. I have also used it successfully internally in a case of canker in the mouth of a cow by a suitable dilution with glycerine and water. Disinfecting powder is another useful form in which the acid can be employed, as it is not so unsightly as the tar when scattered on the floors and walls, and a little, used frequently, quickly deodorizes and purifies the surroundings.
 "Again, its use as a fumigator has frequently come under my personal notice. I believe that in this form its effect is most marked. A little acid put on a heated shovel (not red hot) will quickly deodorize and disinfect a large building, as the fumes ascend, and penetrate all nooks and crevices. Another form of the same process is to keep boiling a small vessel filled with water, and frequently add a quantity of carbolic acid, when the steam will disseminate the fumes with equal effect. It was the knowledge of this effect of carbolic acid which first induced me to write these abrupt notes, thinking they might be of some use to others in cases of pneumo-pneumonia, in which inhalations would be more likely than any other treatment to prove successful.
 "My practice in cases requiring internal application has been to dissolve the acid in glycerine and water, and to dilute until as strong as the mouth can bear without a burning sensation, when a common quantity may be used with any one of our domestic animals. For outward use I have one part acid to ten of lard, olive oil, or other suitable ointment; while, for disinfecting purposes, a common quantity may be used with from five to ten times its bulk to water. It will be well-known to most of your readers that coal tar may be obtained where the manufacture of gas is carried on; while carbolic acid, although certainly a monopoly, is manufactured on a large scale in various parts of the kingdom, and can be procured from any druggist."

NATURE'S METHOD.—W. L. Curtis says in the New York Times: Fifty years ago my employer one day remarked to me, "The idea of not plowing under the manure is preposterous. Why go into the orchard and examine the droppings of the cattle, and that which has been exposed to the hot sun for a day will be as dry as a chip and burn like one." The reply was, "Why valueless and all manure upon the surface must be affected in the same way. When the books and all the live fertilizers said, 'Beware of the manure, and that in a thorough manner. I of course thought that must be the right way. I became owner of a farm afterward, and started in and for some years followed the old plan. The manure was piled up and sowing and planting was done in the sheds where clean out of my cattle sheds where sleds, etc., had been stored, but where some manure and litter had accumulated. They did not know what the wagon was loaded up. "Where shall we put it?" Sure enough, where put it? The plowed ground was all in crops, and it was too late to do it on the manure, and I finally told them to go to the cornfield and spread it evenly on a certain sandy knoll containing about six square rods, upon which little or nothing ever grew. They did so, and the corn was soon up and the small cultivator going in the field, but that particular spot soon got ahead of all the rest and was ahead when ripe, and a good way ahead, too. I cut up the corn and sowed the field to wheat, seeding with red clover, and the wheat and clover there was as far ahead of the rest of the field as had been the corn, and it was from that time on. With this little problem before me I went to experiment and from that time forward I plowed under no more manure except green clover and for experiment's sake, other farmers, prepare your manure well and mix thoroughly with the soil after plowing, and give surface manuring a fair test by the side of both deep and shallow plowing in, and know for yourselves. I think well of the practice of hauling crude manure out in winter direct from the stables. The rains, frosts and snow will do the work, and the manure, or other manure is made the better.
 "To remove grease spots from boys' and men's clothing, particularly, an excellent mixture is made of four parts of alcohol to one part of ammonia. Apply to the spot, let it stand a few minutes, rub gently with a sponge and clean water. The chemistry of the operation consists in that the alcohol and the ether dissolve the grease, and the ammonia forms a soap with it, which is washed out by water. The result is much more satisfactory than when something is used which only serves to spread the spot and make it larger. It is washed out, and finally remove it. If oil is spilled on the carpet and you immediately put or scatter cornmeal over it, the oil will be absorbed by it. Oil may also be removed from carpets upon which you do not care put ether or ammonia by laying thick blotting paper over it and pressing a hot flat-iron on it. Repeat the operation several times, using a clean paper each time.

It is estimated that the gold dollar is used by 60,000,000 of people, the British sovereign by 35,000,000, the French franc by 77,000,000, the silver dollars of all countries by about 382,000,000.
