DYNAMITE.

A Recipe for Making This too Popular Explosive.

Many of the ideas held even by generally well-informed persons in regard to this awful explosive are a little short of wild.

"Nitro-glycerine," said a gentleman who is pretty well informed upon the subject, "is made by uniting nitric acid with glycerine at a warm temperature. It is then absorbed in 'infusorial earth,' which is the residue of microscopic animals, and has great absorptive power. It is really a mineral, and is found in large quantities in the earth. The infusorial earth has much the greater absorptive capacity, and will hold a great deal more nitro-glycerine in the same amount of space."

"Is dynamite really so dangerous to handle as a great many think?"

"Well, the men who make and handle it say that they are not at all afraid of it, and it is well known that if it is lighted with a match it will burn up like paper and do no harm; but at the same time there are scores of cases on record where the stuff has exploded without any one or anything touching it, and they haven't found out yet what causes it to go off. One reason for this, though, is that any one who is near enough to notice what might make it explode is usually collected in fragments after the explosion. I suppose it explodes from decomposition."

"In what shape is it usually made up?"

"In cans or packages. It is not a cake, I believe, but in the form of a loose powder."

"What is the most common way of setting it off?"

"All these explosives are set off by percussion. They use fulminate of mercury, the material that is in percussion caps. This makes a very quick explosion. Fulminate of mercury is used because the vibrations it makes in exploding are the same in number, as those made by the dynamite. The terrific results of dynamite are caused by the suddenness of the explosion."

"What are these infernal machines?"

"An infernal machine is simply a box, or something of the sort, containing dynamite and clockwork, so arranged that at a certain time a hammer falls upon a percussion cap and fires the explosive. There is one striking difference between dynamite and gunpowder, which is that dynamite will do its deadly work without being confined, whereas gunpowder will not. A few spoonfuls of dynamite set off on the floor would shatter it, while the same or a much larger amount of gunpowder would simply end in a puff of smoke. Again, gunpowder fractures with a smooth cleavage, and dynamite grinds up the rock and breaks it into small pieces."

A GOOD BIG STATE.

Plenty of Room for Settlers in California Yet.

A great many do not seem to have a very correct idea of the size or immense area of California. It is 750 miles long, being bounded its entire length on the west by the Pacific Ocean. Its greatest width is 330 miles, and it contains 188,981 square miles, or 120,947,840 square acres of land. Compared to other States of the Union, it is four times the size of New York; it is twenty four times as large as Massachusetts; it is one hundred times as large as Rhode Island. Compared to European countries it is four-fifths the size of Austria, it is the size of Sweden, and equals in the entire area of France. It is nearly twice the size of Italy, and is one half times greater than the whole British Isles containing Great Britain. California contains 50,000,000 acres of land, suited to agriculture and profitable agricultural pursuits. The population of California in 1880 —the census year—including the Indians and excluding the Chinese and Japanese, was 780,000. It now has much larger population. With one-fourth the territory New York had a population of 5,000,000 in 1880, or over six times the population of California. With one twenty fourth the territory Massachusetts had a population of 1,650,000 or nearly twice the population of California. With the same territory, France has a population of 36,000,000 or forty times the population of California. What is meant by these figures is, that the square mile for square mile, the whole area of California is capable of sustaining a larger number of people than New York or Massachusetts, and an equal greater number than France, and that there is still room for people to settle and make homes in California.

ONLY A PRIVATE.

But he Showed a Soul that was Simply Heroic.

Louis Abour was a private in Company B, Fifth Michigan Cavalry, and made a good soldier. At the battle of Trevillian Station he was taken prisoner, and before his release he was confined in five different prison-pens and two jails.

While he was in Millen Prison, an exchange of sixty prisoners was to be made. The officer of the day told off sixty names at the door of the pen, but for some reason, probably because he was too ill or perhaps dead, one man did not come forth. At that moment Louis, who had been sent out after fuel, under guard, of course, came through the gates pushing a wheelbarrow loaded with wood.

"Here, Louis, here's a chance for you. We want sixty men to go South and are short one. Jump into the ranks here!" exclaimed the officer.

"To be exchanged?" asked Louis, trembling more than he did when under fire.

"Yes."

"Then take Hank. He's sick, and will die if he remains here," and Louis darted into the hospital ward. Hank had a pair of pantaloons and shoes, but no coat or hat. Louis put on Hank, put Louis on Hank, and brought him out, weak and tottering. As Hank filed out the gate and once more breathed the air of freedom, Louis, hatless and coatless, took hold of the handles of his wheelbarrow and started for another load of wood.

"Can mortal mind conceive of such an act? It cost him seven months of a living death, and all for a man with whom he was not even intimately acquainted."

Of course he did not look at the picture. Ever since the close of the war, until a few months ago when Hank died, these two men have lived right here in Wayne County, Hank with a home and family, Louis with none. They met occasionally, but as a general thing Hank was a stranger to the act in Millen Prison that set him free and saved his life; never invited him to his home; never alluded to the past, or addressed his savior other than as a mere acquaintance. On his deathbed, however, he told the story, and asked his relatives, if they ever had an opportunity, to befriend Louis for his sake. It was hardly necessary to ask favors for this noblest act the world has ever known.—[Detroit Free Press.

A Fisherman Artist.

There is a collection of paintings on exhibition in Boston, the work of a man who was a few years ago a Gloucester fisherman. His name is George W. Harvey, and his pictures are marines. The attention of summer visitors to Gloucester was first attracted to his work. A little technical skill added to what he had taught himself soon gave him rank among the best of marine painters. His present collection of fifty pictures is the fruit of one summer's work, and they are selling at prices ranging from twenty-five to fifty dollars. He has the great merit of thoroughly knowing his subject, for if anybody finds out what the sea is like at its richest it is the patient, short-tempered fisherman who lives on the banks in the shunnuck little Gloucester schooners.

Fond father—"See here, my daughter, this will never do. You must not invite those young fellows to come visiting." Daughter—"And why not pa? They are particular friends of mine. There can certainly be no objection to them socially. They are all bank presidents." Exactly so, my child, that is the reason why they must not come. His bank is the only one I have an account with and they might tell their cashier about the size of check which I propose to give you to display among your wedding presents. Now suppose they do, pa?" Can't you see? He knows I never had $500 there at one time in my life."

A PAYING INVESTMENT.—At this season of the year, when your cows fail in milk, your horses become rough in coat, your pigs refuse to fatten, you can't work as many eggs as they should, you will find a package or can of McDonald's Celebrated Tonic and Blood Purifying Horse and Cattle Powders judiciously administered an investment that will pay big dividends. They are positively the Horse and Cattle Powders made. Dissatisfied buyers can have their money refunded. What other manufacturer dare make this offer. Sold by all dealers.

McDONALD'S Improved Liver Pills are endorsed and prescribed by many eminent physicians. They do not make hair grow on bald heads or set broken bones; but they are the best corrector of a disordered Liver yet discovered. Money refunded to all dissatisfied purchasers. For sale by E. James.

THE WEEKLY POST

Under a Democratic National Administration.

The Will of the People Vindicated and the Great Wrong Righted.

THE PITTSBURG WEEKLY POST

congratulates its Democratic readers on the dawn of a new year, under conditions that have not existed for a quarter of a century—

"Ring out the old, ring in the new,
Ring out the false, ring in the true."

Cleveland and Hendricks have been elected. After the fourth of March there will be a Democratic administration at Washington, with great possibilities for the progress, prosperity and advancement of the country.

As THE POST has labored unceasingly for twenty-five years for these glorious results, so it will extend to the new administration a hearty greeting and a cordial support in the re-establishment of principles and policies vital to the public welfare, by reforming abuses, righting wrongs and asserting the supremacy of the Democratic faith. We are on the threshhold of important events and great changes. To a Democrat who aided in Cleveland's election, the future is full of interest and hope.

THE WEEKLY POST will aim to keep fully abreast of the times in everything relating to the incoming administration. Its policy at home and abroad will be intelligently discussed, generously supported or candidly and kindly criticised. No year in the history of this journal promises to be so replete with matters of interest to Democrats as the one which we are about to enter. The meeting of Congress, the declaration of the Presidential vote, the inauguration, the new Cabinet, the changes in the public service, the opening up of the books all are of great concern. THE WEEKLY POST will furnish its readers intelligences, with judicious comment from the old Democratic standpoint. Success will not hamper it any more than a quarter of a century of defeat impaired its energies.

The session of the Legislature, with a Reform Governor opposed by a Republican majority, promises to be fruitful of important issues and exciting incident. The coming session of Congress will be even more interesting in its broader field.

In all its varied departments, THE WEEKLY POST will aim at excellence and reliability. Its literary, miscellaneous, news and local departments will be maintained in their utmost efficiency, while its market reports will be prepared with greater care and precision than ever before and made absolutely reliable.

Now the time for Democrats everywhere to take hold, cement and strengthen the party and its chosen representatives, by extending the circulation of Democratic papers. We are no longer on the defensive—we are done with a whining party to day stands for a majority of the American people, and in a few weeks it will be called on to administer the government of the country. Truth is mighty and has prevailed.

A PANTHER AND A RATTLESNAKE

And a Lone Fisherman Have a Very Lively Time of It.

Three men sat on a settee in one corner of the barroom of the Miners' Arms, in Front street last evening, with heads close together, smoking short brier-wood pipes and talking in a slow way, as if they had to stop and throw their weight on it before getting a word longer than one syllable spoken. They were dressed in corduroy trousers, tucked into the tops of their boots, and short thick coats. They were going over their experiences in the Rocky Mountain regions, the hotel being a resort for old-country miners on their way East or West. Finally one of the group named Andrew McDonald straightened up and said, in a louder voice than he had hitherto used: "You may talk about sea serpents, but my pards had an adventure with a rattler last spring that knocks out any yarn you ever heard."

Half a dozen loungers and a reporter gathered around the miner while he continued:

"His name was Heman Fish, and he came from western Ohio. We called him Heme for short. He could do two things better than any man I ever saw. One was to fish and the other was to handle a black-snake whip. I reckon most of you know what a blacksnake whip is. Heme could pick a fly from the ear of the off mule of a four-in-hand, and never let the mule know a whip was anywhere about.

"Last spring he and I got on a spree in St. Louis, and when we shook ourselves together again we found ourselves in a town called Paola, Kansas. As Heme's head began to shrink, he took a notion that we should go away from there by the overland route, and so we went down to Fort Scott and joined the caravan that was bound for New Mexico across the Staked Plains."

"A caravan across the Staked Plains from Fort Scott last spring?" the bartender remarked with some emphasis.

"Yes," said McDonald, as though irritated. "We had followed the procession about two weeks, when one evening we camped on one of the northerly branches of the Red River of the South in a bit of timber. Without waiting a minute Heme gave a fish line and pole from his books under the canvas of our prairie schooner and started down the creek for a mess of fish. Somehow he didn't seem to have his usual luck. The sun was just sinking, and Heme walked on from pool to pool, now and then dropping his line in without success till he was about half a mile down stream. There in an open space, where the grass was short but the woods thick, a few rods away he found a big dead tree that had fallen into the creek and washed around with the top down stream. Just below this the water was deep and still, and as his hook sank into the water he felt the first blood-stirring tug of the evening. It was a catfish. Not very exciting sport, you will say to catch a bullhead, but then the eating of them is never to be despised. For fifteen minutes Heme was so busy that he did not notice the flight of time, but just as he took a jog on his line for the eighth time, he became aware that something was about to happen that he had not anticipated. He said afterward that he felt just as a man does who wakes up at midnight to find himself bolt upright in bed, hearing nothing and wondering what was the matter. The feeling was so strong that instead of landing the fish he looked slowly around. Not five feet away to his left was a big panther, resting on his back, and rubbing the sides of its head along the grass and smiling at him, almost, as it lashed its tail from side to side. It was playing with him cat fashion. Meantime the catfish had swallowed the hook and was tugging away so hard that, in spite of his scare, which made his broad-brimmed hat tremble, he turned to look at the line and the bobbing cork which he always fished with. From the agitated condition of both he kept feeling on a six-foot rattler that was making its way over the edge of the bank of the creek from the old dead log, and was headed directly for him. From the snake he looked to the cavorting panther, and then back to the fish-pole, afraid to strike with it lest the panther should spring on him, and afraid to stand still lest the snake should attack him as soon as it was near enough. Somehow the movements of the panther, as if tired about, rolled over, and jumped still legged into the air, proved a stronger attraction, and for a minute he watched it attentively, until the fish gave a last effort to free itself from the hook. The panther was walking away as if to leave its victim in peace, when Heme looked around and saw the snake was passing him, headed for the timber. Then the inspiration came which saved his life. He had the pole in his hand. Stooping over he caught the reptile by the tail. Quick as this was the panther saw the motion, and turning about settled for a spring as Heme whirled the snake easily but rapidly over his head. The panther was too late. Heme's skill with the whip enabled him to drop the rattler comfortably about the panther's neck, and the next instant buried its fangs in the beast's tongue that showed through its half open mouth.

"The panther mouthily tightened, and, with a yell, he plunged into the creek, and floundering across, ran breathlessly up stream to the camp. When he had managed to get out his story, the whole camp roared at him as the central figure and at what seemed to be about the most unlikely yarn they had ever heard."

"See here, Mack, who primed you to tell that?" said the bartender, wiping his bar on the partly white apron.

"Primed be——," said the story teller. "It's true. I've got the snake's rattle, and I'll show it to you."

He took a solid looking valise from behind the bar, while fumbling for his key, said: "It took us about ten minutes to reach the spot where Heme had been fishing. The panther was still alive, but he was so he lost gore. The snake was in two pieces, the panther having chawed its head off after he was bitten. Here the rattle oil, and here it is."

There were twelve of the rattles, besides the button on the end. The snake was the biggest one. The bartender walked behind the bar and presented a big cut-glass bottle, containing a yellowish fluid, as he placed a number of little scratch-engine bumblers beside it he said: "Drinks on the house. Heme's up. The rattles prove it."—[New York Sun.

A Case that Puzzled the Whole Faculty

Mrs. Milo Ingrum gave the names of some of the most reputable physicians in the two cities (Pittsburgh and Allegheny), to whom she had paid large sums of money for treatment, but she rapidly grew worse. She was then taken to the most reputable physicians and surgeons in New York, but with no better success. They had all pronounced it cancer, and declared she must die. The flesh of her breast was eaten away down to her ribs; the breast bone was laid bare, and the disease made its way upwards, causing the breast to become detached from the wall of the chest, hanging loose from above. See page 26, of Dr. Hartman's "Dis of Lady," how PERUNA cured her. They are given away by druggists, gratis.

SAYS neighbor Smith, "My little girl was pale and sickly, rapidly losing flesh, appetite variable, and sleep much disturbed. Her condition was becoming alarming.—Was advised by a friend to try McDonald's Celebrated Worm Powders. Administered three and she expelled the enormous number of 132 worms." Neighbor Smith now thinks McDonald's Worm Powders are the greatest vermifuge in existence. For sale by E. James, Ebensburg.

HANDY HINTS.

Many Useful Suggestions for the Household.

A handsome sofa-pillow cover is made of crimson satin, with a large half-circle of embroidery in a lighter shade of crimson upon the upper side.

A lambrequin that is both pretty and serviceable for the sitting-room is made of dark seine twine. It should be one-quarter of a yard deep before the fringe is put in, and that may be of any depth to please the fancy. One made of dark green, with a cardinal satin ribbon, is very handsome.

A pleasant entertainment for a few friends is called a "quotation party." When the invitations are given the request accompanies them that the recipient will come to the party with three quotations memorized. When these quotations are given, the name of the author is to be given by any one of the company who can do so. The one who first guesses or gives the name receives a favor, usually a flower, if this is not practicable a bit of narrow bright ribbon, that can be tied in the button hole, is substituted.

Window plants should have plenty of blossoms at the proper time, but in order to blossom they must be plentifully supplied with roots. In lifting plants it is often the practice to reduce the ball of earth lifted with the plant by crumbling the soil around the sides. This destroys the roots to such an extent that the feeding portion of them is completely mutilated, and, as a consequence, fresh rootlets have to start out all over the leading roots before any food can be supplied to support the evaporation rapidly going on from the leaves and stems, especially in very succulent kinds.

A very pretty vase-mat border can be made from the ravelings of Brussels carpet. Cut a foundation piece of the size and shape desired from crinoline. Allow for a border all around two inches wide, and cover the centre with a piece of bright-colored flannel, cloth or velvet. Cut the ravelings into pieces four inches long and arrange in bundles of four and five. Thread the ends of darning cotton, and punching holes close together in the foundation border, fasten on these bundles by drawing the centers through the holes and holding them in place with the darning cotton. Or, the ravelings may be sewed on in any manner most handy to form a full moss border. The mixture of colors is very effective.

Boys are sometimes helped to from habits of order and of good behavior by being allowed to wear some article of dress which they admire and really wish to wear, and for which they must take thought. For example, a boy who had leanings toward pugilism was presented with a pair of sleeve buttons, for which he had longed; they were made of enbbid, and represented a skull and cross bones. So great was his fear that a cross bone might be broken off and lost, that his walks to and from school were characterized by remarkable self-control. Another boy is allowed occasionally to wear a watch that was presented to him by his grand father," and which has, as he says, "a plate glass front," and so must be carefully guarded. Of course, after a time the novelty wears off, but every time that a child behaves properly instead of improperly a tendency in the right direction is developed.

A musical and literary society, which has been popular and successful for two winters past and is still alive, adopted this method of determining who should take part in the programme of the next meeting: In the first place it is perfectly well understood that each member of the society will take part; then the names are put into a hat and are well shaken; then the president, who is blindfolded, selects the names, one at a time. She hands them to the secretary, who reads them at once. Usually it is customary to assign to each one a part which it is well known he or she can take with ease, but sometimes, for fun, and to vary the proceedings, a programme is made out, and then the subjects or parts are designated on separate bits of paper, they are put into a hat and each one who has already had her name drawn from the hat, draws a slip of paper, and is obliged to accept as her part assigned.

Tidies for the common sitting-room should be of inexpensive material, and of a kind that may be laundried. A pretty tidy that answers these requirements is made of white crash; the ends are fringed out to the depth of four or possibly five inches, the edge is overcast to prevent further fringing; two inches above the beginning of the fringe threads are drawn out crosswise, and a ribbon run in; this is put in so that the drawn threads appear in the form of squares; the effect is very pretty. This tidy is long enough so that it can be gathered in the center; it may be tied with a ribbon, or may be simply fastened blindly with a white thread. Another tidy of this description is crocheted of seine twine and has two spaces left for narrow ribbons to be run in. In place of ribbon strips of linen doubled may be used. The bottom is finished with fringe. Pieces for the arms of the chair may be made to match, but in these only one space for ribbon should be left, and no fringe required.

Millions in Cattle.

Some of the wealthiest cattle companies are located in Texas, Colorado and New Mexico, as follows: Texas Live Stock Company, $45,000,000; Cherokee Live Stock, $45,000,000; South Texas, $21,000,000; Northern New Mexico, $10,000,000; Central New Mexico, $6,000,000; Lincoln Company of New Mexico, $8,000,000; Milo A. Smith, Socorro, N. M., $2,000,000. A dozen companies represent $175,000,000. In this ratio it will be only a few years before the vast domain of fine grazing land will be controlled by cattle companies and reap the immense profits of this multiplying wealth of the United States.

THERE never has been offered the people of Cambria county a medicine so deserving of praise and patronage as McDonald's celebrated Worm Powders. They combine the three most desirable points in any remedy viz: Smallness of dose, easiness to take and effectiveness. They are positively the greatest worm destroyer of the age. Many children suffer continually and finally die, their parents never dreaming that their stomachs are infested and eaten through with worms. Twenty-five cents invested in a box of McDonalds celebrated Worm Powders would have saved the little sufferer's life and given back its rosy cheeks and blooming health. Any case of failure to cause repulsion where worms exist, the money promptly refunded. Sold by E. James, Ebensburg.

His Slippery Glass Eye.

"The Squire," says the author of "The Hoosier Schoolmaster," "wore one glass eye and a wig. The glass eye was constantly slipping out of focus, and the wig turning around sidewise on his head when he addressed the people of the Fast Creek District." Said spectacles, Parker's Hair Balsam preserves and promotes the growth of the natural hair. It also restores the natural color to hair which has faded or become gray. Clean, elegant, beneficial, highly perfumed.

THE USE of Iodoform or mercurials in the treatment of catarrh—whether in the form of snuffs or ointments—should be avoided, as they are both injurious and dangerous. Iodoform is easily detected by its offensive odor. The only reliable catarrh remedy on the market to day is Ely's Cream Balm, being free from all poisonous drugs. It has cured thousands of chronic and acute cases, where all other remedies have failed. A particle is applied into each nostril; no pain; agreeable to use. Price 50 cents; of druggists.

NEW YORK, Jan. 27, 1884.—Messrs. Ely Bros.—Gentlemen: My boy (5 years old) was recently taken with cold in the head which seemed finally to settle in his nose.—His nose was stopped up for days and nights so that it was difficult for him to breathe and sleep. I called a physician who prescribed, but did him no good. Finally I went to the drug store and got a bottle of your Cream Balm. It seemed to work like magic. The boy's nose was clear in two days, and he has been o. k. ever since.—E. J. HAZZARD.
