A Dead Body Found Near South Fork. On Wednesday morning of this week, as Mr. John Smay and a boy by the name of Funk were fishing along the river a short distance from South Fork, near the viaduct, their attention was directed by the barking of a small dog to a large hollow log, a short distance from the river. Upon going to the place, they were horrified to find the head of a man exposed at one end of the log, his body and lower limbs extending in the enclosure. They drew the body from its rest-ing place, and with assistance conveyed it into South Fork, where a jury was obtained and an inquest held the same afternoon. The body of the unknown wan was found to be well dressed, but nothing could be found on his person to learn his name or to there. THE Illinois high license law of 1883, which fixes the unnimum license fee for dram shops at $500, and for mait liquors at $150 only in cities, towns and villages, and authorizes county boards to grant license on like terms upon petition of the legal voters of any town or precinct, has diminished the number of saloons in Chicago from 1,000 to 500, while the revenue is increased a million dollars. In nineteen other cities and towns there were, before the enforcement of the high license, 733 saloons, yielding a revenue of $89,950. There are now to these places only 468 saloons, but the revenue has been increased to $254,000. The new system has shut up the low groggeries which were resorts of vile characters, and the consequence is less crime and drunkenness. The number of arrests have tallen off and drunkenness has decreased in the larger cities by 30 per cent. There is also an inprovement in the quality of the men who keep the saloons. --
