FARM NOTES.

PROTECTING MANURES. There is some difference of opinion as to protecting manures against rain, wind, and the exhausting effect of the sun. Doubtless all these have an injurious effect upon the manure heap, and it is certainly true that without any moisture at all from rain, it will not be improved. However this may be, we are very certain that unlimited exposure to the weather will prove highly injurious are young and growing too fast, as is often the case, to the quality of the manure. A leading farmer told us some time ago that he regarded the complete exposure of a manure heap through the winter and until it can be used in the spring, to damage it fifty per cent. In other words, one load of well protected manore is worth two of the exposed. This se me almost incredible, but it may not be far from the truth.

There is no question that a subject which so vitally concerns the farmer as this one of manure, and causes him to give so much attention to it, possesses great merit. His straw is not to be sold because it is to be converted into manure. Stock is fed through the winter for the express purpose of accumulating manure. Articles that scarcely pay to send to the city are nevertheless hauled there, in order that manure may be brought back as a return load ; and yet the whole of the manure gathered is frequently all the season exposed to the sun, wind and rain until it is greatly diminished in value-one-half, according to the opinion of our agricultural informant. The trouble is that few Hops on the white label. Shon all the vile, pol-sonous staff with "Hop" or "Hops" in their name, really believe that exposed manure undergoes this serious loss. Hence in arranging farm buildings-and we know that many are so arranged-that it will pay almost as well to look to the preservation of the manute as of hay or grass. And those whose barns have no provision for this purpose, can not spend 25 or 50 dollars better than putting a up shed under which the manure heap may be protected against these adverse influences.

This is the season of the year when the stock is in the pastures, and, as the gross is fresh, salt is perhaps relished by them more than at most any other season of the year.

SIMPLE REMEDIES.

Prepared chalk, to be found always at druggists, is used as a remedy for acid stomach, and all unpleasant headaches and sickness to which it gives rise .--This is one form of dyspepsia, and is sometimes cured by the uso of this simple remedy.

Contrary to an old theory, a medical man gives the following on how to manage a cold : Eat nothing but a piece of toast at each meal, for one day, drink freely of cold water, walk twice a day till you are in a gentle perspiration and go to bed early.

A nice dietetic preparation for the sick can be made according to the Druggists' Circular, by taking of wheat bread one ounce ; cinnamon, one dram ; water, one pint. Boil them till well mixed, then add a little grated nutmeg and sugar. Wine or butter may be added, if liked.

Sleeping with the mouth closed will prevent that dryness and bitter tasts so commonly experienced on awaking. These unpleasant sensations ordinarily come of sleeping with it open ; the habit of keeping it closed may be formed by a careful clearing of the nasal passages on lying down, and by going to sleep with a determination to keep the lips closed. Everybody has a cure for sore throat, but simple remedies appear to be most effetual. Salt and water is used by many as a gargle, but a little honey and alum dissolved in sage tea is better .-An application of cloths wrung out of hot water and applied to the neck, banging as often as they begin to cool, has the most potency for removing inflammation of anything we ever tried. It should be kept up for a number of hours; during the evening is usually the most convenient time for applying the remedy. In advanced stages of diphtheria, however, this will not answer, Frequent sips of ice water will usually relieve a sore throat.

"Windows open more, would keep doctors from the door." A very large quantity of fresh air is spoiled and rendered useless by the act of breathing. A man spoils not less than a gallon every minute. In eight hours' breathing a full-grown man spoils as much air as seventeen three-bushel sacks could hold. If he were shut up in a room seven feet broad, seven feet high and seven feet long, the doors and windows fitting so tightly that no air can pass through, he would die, poisoned by his breath, in a very few hours ; in twenty-four hours he would have spoiled all the air contained in the room, and have converted it into poison. Let in the air so that a current will not pass over you while in mend it by a more or less poisoned condition of the blood; a condition which grow worse by neglect, and finally may send one to the grave. One day a young physician discovered on his nose what turned out to be a ma-lignant ulceration; the blood virus at-tacked his brain and killed him.

A prominent merchant of apparently average health died suddenly the other day; an examination showed that one kidney, entirely decayed, had poisoned the blood terribly! Had this condition been recognized in time, he might have lived to the full "three score and ten."

Every day we neglect to take such pre-cautions as are herein indicated, we may be said to drive a nail into our collin. The blood is poisoned every day ; purified every day, untimely death is inevitable.

HORSES.

The welfare of the farmer requires a borse equally adapted to the farm and road. He wants horses of more strength and better qualities than he now has. The perfect horse for the farm and road " one possessing those combined qualities that render him valuable for whatever duties he is required to perform, whether in the field or on the road ; and this hope is the one that is docile, of good temper, quick and easily managed, with steady nerve, added to strength and endurance. Good-natured, docile anim ds are always the best workers; 12 - Factlous horse warries himself more us for restraint or guidance, and is more are to be abused by his driver, and consequently cannot thrive as well. Let the farmers get sound, good-blood colts and make them by training just what thay want, for no animal is more susceptible to teaching than a horse, and none more ready to respond to kindness by willing, obedient service. The colt is not naturally III tempered, and if it becomes so, blame is due to some one who has handled it. Rapid walking increases greatly the value of farm horses, and this is largely the result of training. So long have our farmers been negligent and careless in the cultivation of those qualities they most need in the horse for farm and road, that they must be educated up to their own best interests before we shall attain excellence in this direction.

COLTS.

An old stock breeder tells us that those who raise colts usually exercise care in the selection of good stock to breed from ; but a great many neglect to give the colts proper attention during hot weather, while they are running with dams. It is not uncommon to see those that were healthy and well developed in early summer, looking puny and poor, and their hair falling off, before NOW IN USE=36,989. autump. The trouble arises from allowing the colt to draw milk while the blood of the mare is in a high state of heat from violent exertion.

When the dam is used in hot weather upon the farm or road, so as to heat her blood, the colt should never be allowed to suck until she is fully cooled off. Let him fill himself before the mother is put in the harness, and if it is important that he should accompany the dam, tie him at her able so that he will be unable to draw milk until he is liberated ; for it is much better that he should go hungry a few hours than to take his food when it is in a fevered state.

If the mare is to make a long distance on a hot day, and return at night, it is best to leave the colt at home, and draw the milk from the udder by hand once or twice during the day and upon returning, then allow the colt to fill himself gradually as the milk is secreted.

Colts mjured by heated milk seldom recover from it for a year or two, and many times never. They become re-

EVERY farmer should plant a crop for fodder. Grass will begin to fail in July and in August is usually scarce. A lot of fodder corn will then be found of . great value to keep up the flow of milk ; and if there is a succession of such crops the fodder will furnish acceptable provision for the cows until the end of the season. But it will not do to sow corn broadcast. The plants must have light and air to make a healthful growth, as the white, watery, stuff which often grow has but little value as feed.

PEAR trees seldom need trimming after they go to beaming, except cutting out dead wood if there is any. The best condition for a pear orchard is to keep the land in sod and never plow it, but not allow the grass to grow within two and effectiveness.
