The insect is in one sease a tiny manfacturer himself, fluding his "raw material" chiefly in the leaf of the mulberry tree, which gives name to the common silk-moth, the caterpillar of which is the silkworm. The tree is said by a proverb to be made for the worm and the worm for the tree, and it seems to have a fibre peculiarly suitable for textile use, some of the Pacific Islanders making clothing by macerating the bark of the paper mulberry, without the intervention of the silkworm. Most of the silk of commerce is made by this one worm from this one food, yet it can feed in whole or in in part, upon other leaves, as those of the osage orange in this country, and it has a score of cousins and distant relations, as the Tussah moth of India, which live upon other crees and produce a similar material.

The moth is about an inch long, whitish, with brown stripes, and lays at the close of summer numerous eggs about the size of pin heads, attached singly to the leaf with a sort of gum, which when dry has a silky appearance. The moths soon die, the eggs do not batch until the next summer, and can meanwhile be sent around the world. The sale of grain or seed, as the eggs are also called, is of itself a business, for it brings as much as four dollars per ounce ten-fold the price years ago, before an epidemic swept through the silk world. Each moth lays from four hundred to seven hundred eggs, but it takes over six hundred thousand to make a pound, In obtaining eggs for breeding, the grower usually places the moths on cloth in a dark, warm room, where they contentedly lay their eggs and die. In tropical countries, such as Southern China and India, the eggs hatch by natural heat; in other, artificial heat is necessary; and in old times hot-beds were used, or the eggs were carried about by the women, in little bags in their bosoms. The careful grower makes ready for the hatching by providing a number of latticed trays or bundles of twigs, about which the food of finely chopped mulberry leaves is distributed. The tiny worm at first eats two meals a day; at the end of five days he casts his first skin, on the ninth day his second, again, on the fifteenth, twenty-second and thirty-second days he "moults," becoming torpid and exchanging old skins for new. Like his fellow worm, man, he has "seven ages," the sixth, when he has obtained the mature age of thirtytwo days, is the spinning, and the last the breeding period. At the approach of the spinning age the worms from an ounce of eggs (nearly forty thousand eggs) will have required over 1,200 lbs. of leaves, and will need about 184 square feet for their homes.

Each day's hatching is kept together, lest the older eat up the food from the weaker brethren, and every care must be taken to prevent the growth of the minute fungus which makes "silkworm rot," and to ward off other dis- The Will of the People eases. In 1857 Enrope was swept of much of its silken wealth by one of these parasitic diseases, and one of Pasteur's early triumphs was in discovering its nature.

The worm is conservative and never attempts to move from his place until it is time to begin spinning. He then becomes distended with the silk juice and semi-transparent, like a ripe yellow plum, and he can presently be observed lifting his head and looking about for a good site for his eccoon building which has been furnished by the cocoon grower in arches of twigs on lattice work. some of the worms are lazy, and the twig has to be applied. The spinner, with careful forecast, adjusts his body in the best position for the cocoon, and commences to throw the floss which forms it outer coating.

The material of the silk is a gummy secretion in sericteria, two large glands along each side of the body, terminating and hope. each in a spineret in the mouth; each thread proves on microsopic examination to be double, one strand coming from each spineret. "What the angler prizes as "silkworm gut," is this sericterium soaked in vinegar, stretched and dried in the sun. Species will not hamper it any more each in a spineret in the mouth; each finer : he fixes his body in place with his hooked feet and throws his head here and there as he spins.

The thread is sometimes 1,800 feet long without break; good cocoons should yield 300 yards. It takes at least 2,500 worms to raise a pound of silk. Within five or six days the spinuing is completed, and the moth presently makes preparations to emerge, by the help of another secretion which softens and dissolves the end of the cocoon. Since in piercing the end of the cocoon the worm breaks the continuity of the thread, it is usually killed just before this stage by exposing the cocoon to the sun where | Single Subscription, one year, the temperature is above 88 degrees, or by baking, steaming, or otherwise heating them so that the fibre is not gum-

"O, Lor Hit 'Im Again's In the early days of Methodism in Scotland, a certain congregation, where there was but one rich man, desired to build a new chapel. A church meeting was held.

The old rich Scotchman rose and said: Brethren, we dinns need a new chapel; I'll give £5 for repairs." Just then a bit of plaster falling from the celling hit him on the head. Looking up and seeing how bad it was, he said: "Brethren, its worse thon I thought; I'll make it 50 pun'." "Oh, Lord," exclaimed a devoted brother on a back seat, "bit 'im again!" There are many human tabernacles which are in sore need of radical building over, but we putter and fuss and repair in spots without satisfactory results. It is only when we are personally alarmed at the real danger that we act independently, and do the right thing. Then it is that we most keenly regret because we did not sooner use our judgment, follow the advice born of the experience of others and jump away from our perils.

Thousands of persons who will read this paragraph are in abject misery to-day when they hight be in a satisfactory condition. They are weak, lifeless, full of odd aches and pains, and every year they know they are getting worse, even though the best doctors are patching them in which are in sore need of radical building the best doctors are patching them in spots. The origin of these aches and pains is the kidneys and liver, and if they would build these all over new with Warner's safe cure as millious have done, and cease investing their money in miscrable unsuccessful patchwork, they would be well and happy and would bless the day when the Lord 'hit 'em' indicated the common sense course for them to pursue.—Include Press.
