THE VICE-PRESIDENT DEAD.

He Dies Quietly After a Brief Illness, at His Home in Indianapolis.

INDIANAPOLIS, Nov. 25 .- Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice-President of the United States, died very suddenly at his residence in this city at 4:45 o'clock this anticipated a fatal termination of his brief illness and nobody was with him Hon. John Cooper, Treasurer of State, returning home in their carriage about midnight. Hendricks had taken off complained of chillinesss and a certain degree of exhaustion, but attributed it to malarial influence. Hs sat by the urged to do so. He slept restlessly till about eight o'clock this morning, when he arose, dressed himself and ate quite siderable delayed business during the day. He and Mrs. Hendricks walked out for nearly half an hour, and he had apparently regained his physical vigor and cheerfulness. An hour later, however, he began to be troubled with pains in the region of the stomach, and Mrs. Hendricks sent for the family physician, Dr. W. C. Thompson, the life-long tinued to increase he was given an emetic and afterward an injection, and relief came in a patural way. He arose from the bed where he had lain only a per, talking cheerfully with his wife and old house servant. Just before noon he had a relapse, however, and the physician was again summoned and administered the usual remedies, besides bleed ing the patient, and Mr. Hendricks again expressed himself as being greatly relieved. He remained in his room all afternoon, occasionally rising from his bed, to which he was compelled to return by a recurrence of the pains in his abdomen. To all callers, and they were numerous, he sent word that he was indisposed, but would be glad to been at his bedside all day, went down to the parlor to see a caller who had come to consult with her regarding the affairs of a reformatory institution of ty minutes. THE PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

The Law on the Subject Which Was Passed in 1792.

By the death of Vice-President Hendricks the country is once more solemnly admonished of the urgent necessity of making better provisions for the transmission of the Presidential office. One life only is a parrier to the temporary restoration of the Executive office to the party from which it was taken by the people at the ballot-box a year ago. In the event of the death of President Cieveland during the recess of Congress the President pro tempore of the Senate would be his successor, and the whole executive power of the Government would be transferred to the defeated party until an election could be held. When President Johnson was impeached the general understanding was that, in the event of his conviction, Benjamin F. Wade, of Ohio, President pro tempore of the Senate, would succeed him.

The only law on this subject was passed in 1792, three years after the establishment of the Federal Government. This law prescribes that in case of the removal, death, disability or resignation both of the President and Vice President, the President of the a years imprisonment and a fine of $500. Senate pro tempore, and in case there shall be no President of the Senate then the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being, shall act as President of the United States until a President shall be elected. Should there be no President pro tempore of the Senate, and the vacancies should occur after the expiration of one Congress and the assembling of another, there a young life might have been saved by the would be no Speaker of the House, and prompt use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral! Be no officer would exist to fill the station of President of the United States. Until the people could hold an election the office of President would be vacant. But there is no reason to apprehend that the Government would lapse into anarchy on that account.

By the act of 1792, whenever the offices of President and Vice President both become vacant it is provided that tification to be made to the Governor of every State for holding an election for President and Vice President of the United States within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday of December next ensuing. But if there the first Wednesday in December, then Wednesday in December of the next year. Should the office of President become vacant now it could not be filled by election of the people until the 4th of March, 1887. But would there be a vacancy in the Presidential office during that time? When Congress assembles would the President pro tempore chosen by the Senate or the Speaker of the House act as President until a President elected by the people be installed and page in Washington, remained with | in office? On these questions the law is The good sense of a people long accustomed to self-government may be relied said to bis nephew : "I am free at last. upon to prevent anarchy or violent dis-Send for Eliza," meaning his wife, and orders in administration should a vathese were his last words, for the young cancy occur in the Presidential office.
