The Much Discussed Question of Home Rule.

LONDON, Jan. 10 .- Politiciaus of all shades seem to be thoroughly at sea home rule. The leaders of all parties have suddenly become very reticent, and the closest questioning fails to draw from them an utterance upon which the remotest idea as to the stand they will take on the Irish question can be based.

Mr. Gladstone appears to be in a state of great perplexity, and is apparently more or less nonplussed by the conflict ing elements within his own party. He seems to realize that it would be the sheerest folly to attempt to give battle to give battle to the Tories with his own How to overcome all bickerings and get promotes growth. his forces united on some definite plan of action causes him much anxiety, and the mental strain under which he is laboring has caused great apprehension among his triends, who fear that he
