There are two ways of shooting deer, hunting with dogs and stalking. The latter is the method adopted by the hunters who supply our markets, and is the most effective way. Hunting with a pack of keen nosed dogs is find sport, for the music of the pack thrills the nerves, and as it approaches the hunter | that the most delicate stomach will bear. he braces himself to face the game and A SPECIFIC FOR MALARIA, bring it down. But in still hunting a knowledge of woodcraft is necessary. The man who shoots deer for sport alone usually tries to kill bucks with their branching antlers, and is content with the possession of a magnificent head as a trophy of the chase. The still hunter for market venison is humbler minded but wiser in his purpose, for it is the doe or the yearling which affords the best venison, being free from the musky odor so noticeable in all bucks. A deer hanging at the door of a restaurant is one thing. Alive and on the alert in its THE KASKINE CO., M Warren St., New York. native wilds is quite another.

The men who shoot deer for the money earned in the pursuit, being inhabitants of the neighborhood and familiar with the ground and every trick and device of the game, are the most successful hunters. They are deeply learned in woodcraft, and have a natural bent for following the track of a browsing deer nutil they come within range and sight.

When much hunted the ears of deer become very acute, and then he is very difficult to approach. One of the most anaryelous traits of a deer is his quickness to notice a movement, no matter how slight. The hunter slowly raises his head over a ridge or a fallen log as he creeps from one tree to another, yet the deer instantly detects it unless the movement is made when the animal has Its head down while feeding or walking.

Having discovered his quarry the still hunter now exercised the utmost care Health Renewer. and calls on his stock of patience. Crouching and watchful, the hunter always waits until the deer lowers his head to feed before he endeavors to creep a foot or two nearer.

Fawns will skip and gists. play after feeding, and yearlings are apt | to be frisky at this time, while even an old buck or doe will sometimes condescend to romp with the young ones.

This over, the deer takes to wandering, nibbling as he gees. At length the animal takes a stand and remains almost motionless for from five to even twenty minutes. The hunter now steals forward iach by inch until within range then up goes the trusty rifle, a carefu! sight is taken at the glistening coat, and the next instant the echoes ring with the report of the weapon, the peculiar dull sound of the bullet striking the deer, telling the trained ear of the hunter that his aim was a true one. Then the brush seems alive as the deer go crashing through the bushes; but the eye of the hunter is fixed upon the one he has just covered, and as he rushes forward he sees the traces of blood on the track and follows it. If the bullet has struck a vital spot he has seldom to go far before he either overtakes the dying animal or finds it stretched in the last agonies, its large eyes full of tears at the cruelty that has caused its pain.

For the Farmer.

As illustrating the difference between the time consumed in tillage where the rows are long or short, Secretary Bonham, of the Ohio State Board of Agriculture, gives an instance of a field of corn in which the rows were 610 rods long, the piece about one-third as wide. The cultivation, about twenty-five acres, requiring about three days for the long way, and four and a half days for the cross cultivation.

Oil, says the American Agriculturist, is fatal to every insect it touches and sulphur is very offensive to them, A mixture of four ounces of lard and one of sulphur, well rubbed together, and with the addition of one ounce of kerosens oi! and one dram of creosote, will be found an excellent remedy against all sorts of insect vermin, while the liberal use of kerosene oil on poultry rocats will free the fewls of their tormentors.

Colonel Curtis says in the New York Tribune that a mixture of two-thirds oats and one-third corn has given him much better results, especially with breeding ewes, than corn alone. On corn alone, with their hay, they become feverish and very much disordered with respect to yield of milk and condition or udders, many lambs are lost. If hay be fed a gill of grain per day will be enough, but with straw twice as much should be given.

That mutton is far healthier than pork as food has long been conceded Dr. Randall, the author of several valuable works on sheep husbandry, says that when the taste for mutton shall fully extend to our rural population : when our laboring farmers shall have learned, as they ought to learn and will learn, that eating fat pork the year around is not conducive to health and an enlarged general economy; when they shall have acquired the habit, as they conveniently could, of killing mutton habitually for household consumption in its fresh state-our people, now the greatest consumers of animal food amona the civilized nations of the world, will become the greatest consumers of mutton in the world.

Sagacity of the Coyole.

It is during the weeks going just before and following immediately after the birth of the puppies that the old dog-coyotes work their bardest and most systematically. In hunting at this time, our wolf adds to his ordinary pertinacity and zeal, the sagacity and endurance necessary to turn his victims and drive them back to his home, knowing that otherwise his mate and her weaklings will be unable to partake of the feast.

A remarkable picture of this was given some years ago, by a writer in an English magazine, who, in one of the best "animal chapters" it has ever been my fortune to read, detailed such a chase as witnessed by him in the grand forests near Lake Nicarague, "Certainly," he exclaims at the conclusion of his account, "certainly no training could have bettered the dog's run. To drive a grown buck back to his startingplace, to send on a portion of the pack to that point where he would strive to break cover, to head him again and again into the cover where his speed could not be exerted to the full, were feats which might well puzzle all the best dogs in England, and the human intelligence which directs them."

His game and its getting are not always so noble as this, however, and the coyote knows well the pinch of famine, especially in winter. "The main object of his life seems to be the satisfying of a hunger which is always craving; and to this aim all his cunning, impudence, and audacity are mainly directed." Nothing comes amiss, Though by no means the swiftest footed quadruped upon the plains, he runs down the deer, the prong-horn, and others, tiring them out by trickery and then overpowering them by force of numbers. The buff 4lo formerly afforded him an unfailing supply, in the shape of carrion or chance fragments left him by his Brahamsthe white wolves-who steadly followed the herds, and seized upon decrepit or aged stragglers, or upon any calves they were able to surround and pull down. In such piracy the coyotes themselves often engaged, though it tried their highest powers; and success tollowed a system of tireless worrying. The poor bison or elk, upon which they concentrated, might trample aud gore half the pack, but the rest would "stay by him," and finally nag him to death. I remember once reading an account of the strategy by which a large stag was forced to succumb to a pack that had driven it upon the ice of a frozen lake. Part of the wolves formed a circle about the pond, within which the exhausted and slipping deer was chased DUULO round and round, by patrols frequently relieved, until, fainting with fatigue and loss of blood, the noble animal fell, to be torn to pieces in an instant.

Broke the Cat's Heart.

"Stories have often been told," said Emil Paul last night, "about fidelity and intelligence of dogs, but I don't think cats have ever been given enough credit," and he stroked a big black one that lay dozing on his knees.

"I was lying sick with malaria, about two years ago," he said, becoming reminiscent, "and my little boy was dying with pneumonia at the same time. The baby lay with his mother on a bed and i was on a cot near them. I hadn't slept at night for a great many years. All the rest I had was in daytime. The doctor told me that I must sleep nights or I would not get well, and one night he gave me a lot of morphine. Before it took effect my wife had placed a lamp on a chair beside the cot and I lay reading. We had a black cat that was a great playmate for my boy. He was a fine big fellow, and while the baby was sick he sat by the bed constantly eying the boy, as if to say, "Oh hurry up and get well; things are awfully dull without you.'

"Presently my wife and the baby fell asleep. I began to feel the drug, too, and I dropped asleep. I was awakened by the cat scratching at my neck. The bed clothes were on fire and burning fiercely, I jumped up and put the flames out. I was holding a book when I fell asleep and I suppose as my arm dropped I knocked the lamp over and the clothing caught fire. If it hadn't been for that cat I'm sure we'd have been burned to death.

"Well," continued Mr. Paul, "my boy died. It was on Tuesday and we kept the remains until Sunday. The cat took up a position under the coffin and never left it to eat or drink. An old Irish woman came in and saw him

"'Oh take him a way,' she said; 'shure he's bad tuck,' and my wife locked him up in the closet. But he howled and scratched the door, so I told them to let him out. He ran back in his old place under the coffin. He was thin and looked half starved, just as he was. We put milk alongside him, but he would not touch it. I sent for a negro doctor, and he tried to force some medicine down the cat's throat. The mouser wouldn't swallow it. We buried the boy on Sanday. Monday morning when I went into the room I found our pet tabby stretched out where he had mourned, dead. He died of grief, I tell you, and nothing else.

HUGH DEISKEL. Allegheny twp, Oct. 27, 1987.

A Truthful Story.

The young man who does just as little as possible for an employer sometimes wonders why he is not given a position in the business house in which he is employed when a less brilliant companion, who works for another establishment, is advanced very rapidly. The reason probably is that the less brilliant companion is more faithful, and works conscientiously, always seeking to do more than enough barely ly to secure his salary. Somebody sees and appreciates his work and when the opportunity comes a better place is given him, which he fills with equal faithfulness. An illustration of this may be found in the following true incident:

A boy about 16 years of age had been seeking employment in one of our large cities. He had looked vainly for two weeks, and was well nigh hopeless of getting work to do when one afternoon he entered a store kept by a gentleman whom we will call Mr. Stone.

The lad asked the usual question: 'Can you give me anything to do ?" Mr. Stone to whom he appealed, auswered swered the young man and went below. As the store was about closing for the afternoon, he came up stairs and went to Mr. Stone.

what hastily. "Piled the wood? Well, here's your money."

"No, sir ; I'm not through, and I should like to come and finish in the morning," said the young fellow, refus-

in orderly tiers, the room was cleanly swept, and the young man was at the moment engaged in repairing the coal

"Yes, sir, I know it," answered the lad; "but I saw this needed to be done, and I had rather work than not. I don't expect any pay but my quarter." went up to his office without further comment. Half an hour later the young brushed, for his pay, Mr. Stone passed him his quarter. "Thank you," said the youth, and

"Stop a minute," said Mr. Stone. "Have you a place in view where you can find work ?"

"Well, I want you to work for me. Here"-writing something on a piece of paper-take this to the gentleman standing by the counter there and he will tell you what to do. I'll give you six dollars a week to begin with. Do your work as well as you did that down stairs and-that's all," and Mr Stone turned away before the young fellow recovered from his surprise sufficiently to speak. This happened tifteen years ago. Mr. Sione's store is more than twice as large as it was then, and its superintendent to-day is the young man who began by piling up kindling wood for twenty-five cents. Faithfulness has been his motto. By it he has advanced step by step, and has not yet reached the topmost round of success.

A justice of the peace in the interior of Michigan had a case before him some days ago in which the defendant, who had been arrested as a suspicious character, and plead guilty to vacrancy, was sent to the Detroit House of Correction for six months. A constable took him in charge to deliver him there, and as the man seemed rather pleased at the idea of securing board and lodgings for six months he was not handcuffed. As the train was about ready to go the constable moved across the aisle to talk politics with a friend, and pretty soon they were having it hot an! heavy. trace the impression, by suggestion and association, back to some such origin. This leads us to infer that in cases where we are unable to do this, it is because suggestion or association falls us. If we deny that memory has any thing to do with these impressions, then they become mysteries, and such mysteries as haunt and perplex a sensitive mind. It is more reasonable to admit the possible weakness and untrustworthiness of our faculties than to suppose that anything has happened contrary to the course of nature.
