The police last night arrested under peculiar circumstances a couple who claim to be brother and sister. They gave their names as William and Jessie Green and their ages as 29 and 20 years respectively. Both are coarse looking, with many days' dust on their faces and hands. Their arrest was made in this

About 8 o'clock they went into Osterholt's saloon, on South Fourteenth street, the woman wearing male attire and holding her head down as though to hide her face. Her pants were baggy and hung loosely, and the coat and vest seemed several sizes to large. Her hair was cut short and was covered with a greasy cap. Her companion said that they had tramped a long distance and that they were both tired and hungry. Anton Ragel, a butcher, doing business at 1404 Clark avenue, was in the saloon and hearing the touching story, requested the pair to accompany him to the house, adding that he would give them supper. They went with him, and after giving them plenty to eat Ragel proceeded to bundle up a lot of bread and meat, so that they could carry enough to last them another day. He happened to look at the woman while bundling supplies, and after studying her features for a few seconds he asked if she was not a woman. She denied her sex at first, but admitted later that her attire was not becoming to her sex. She was then turned over to Mrs. Ragel while he went out to look for a policeman, being satisfied that there was something wrong.

Sergeant Worcester visited the house and arrived there just as she completed the transformation, throwing off her coat, vest and trousers, and donning a dress and other garments given her by Mrs. Ragel. The pair were then taken to the Four Courts and locked up to await the result of a further investigation. They said they were brother and sister, and that they had not done anything wrong. The women said she wore masculine attire because it was more convenient than petticoats and other cumbersome garments. The man who claims to be her brother then made a long statement to Sergeant Lang. He said that he left Omaha fast August for the purpose of coming to this

"My sister had been working at the Emmet House," he said, "and I had been working at my trade. When we concluded to come here we had but little money, and we, concluded to buy a boat and come by river. We left in August and stoped at every town and village along the Missouri until we reached Glasgow, Mo., last December. The ice was then running and we concluded to stop until it went out. While we were there the river froze over and we had to wait a long time. I worked then on a bridge and supported my sister, but I could not save anything. We left when we had a chance to navigate, and we got along nicely until we reached Augusta, when our boat capsized, throwing everything into the river. I had to rescue my sister, and while doing it tore off most of her clothes. As she had nothing else, I gave her an old suit I had saved. We tramped here from Agusta, which is about thirty-five miles from the city."

He told of many incidents connected with their trip, but he insisted that his sister had no wrong motive in wearing clothes unbecoming to her sex.

The woman was reluctant to make any statement, but in reply to questions corroborated her companion's statement, excepting that portion concerning her attire. She said she began wearing men's clothes soon after she AMERICAN left Omaha, because her own attire was a nuisance to her and her brother. Both had diaries giving a history of their trip, with the incidents of each day since they left. The police thought that it must be a runaway match and corcluded to hold them. The pair had no objections as they were both very tired and travelstained, the woman complaining of sore feet and her companion of a cold .- Chicago Times.

Almost as Old as Fingers. Forks are distinctly mentioned in I. Samuel XII., 21, in connection with the file which was used to sharpen the prongs. In the Pentateuch mention is made of "flesh hoocks," evidently used for taking the meat out of the pots or off the pans. Ateneus mentions the "fork" but it does not appear whether it meant a bident or a trident, and it is certain that the ancient Greeks were ignorant of the use of the fork while eating. Two branched instruments were found at Heredlaneum, but they were not known to be used in any period of Roman history. The Duke of Bergundy used forks at table, and is said to have had two. In his time the loaves were made round, and were placed by the side of the carver, who had a pointed carving knife and a skewer of silver or gold, which he stuck into the joint of meat, and having cut off a piece, placed it on a slice of bread, which was served to the guest on the point of the carving knife. This custom still obtains in many parts of Europe. Before the revolution in France, when a gentleman was invited to dinner, it was customary for him to send his servant with his knife, fork, and spoon, or if he had no servant, he carried them in his breeches pocket as a carpenter carries his rule. The use of forks was not introduced into England until the time of James I., having been brought from Italy. Their use was ridiculed by many as a superviceable piece of finery. Ben Johnson joined in the laugh against them in his play of "The Devil's Ass." It is not difficult even now to remember when the knife only, notwithstanding the presence of 'the fock, was used to convey food to the mouth, showing how difficult it was to get rid of the old cus-

Mount Vernon.

During the war, says a Washington etter, while the bloodiest battles on the Potomac were being fought, the southern and northern troops fraternized on this spot, and not a shot was fired nor a blow exchanged on the domain of Mount Vernon It was neutral ground. The soldiers exchanged coffee and tobacco and lolled amicably together nuder the trees, then went back to shooting and killing each other as they were off the sacred ground. The most irreverent scoffer must walk with reverence through the ancient frame house in which so much of our history is embalmed. Hanging in the hall is the great key of the Bastile, sent to Washington by Lafayette, near it is the General's field-glass hung on its rack by Washington himself and never disturbed Of all the memories of Mount Vernon none are more interesting than those of Eleanor Custis-poor Nelly, who died at 22, and was her stepfather's pet. In one room stands her haapsichord, an immense machine, just the size of a grand piano of the present day, with two banks of keys like an organ. Beside it are some ancient blue chairs embroidered by her dead fingers a century ago. In the ground stands her rosebush beside which tradition says she received her first offer, and which the guileless and credulous of her sex are persuaded to walk around six times to bring a similar events about. One of the Regents of Mount Vernon was to have magnificent Turkish rugs made to resemble as far as possible the rag carpets which were the floor coverings in Martha Washington's day, and for that purpose scraps of the rag carpet were sent abroad to be as nearly simulated as possible. And way up high, under the roof is a little hip-roofed. dormer-windowed rookery, which after Gen. Washington's death, his widow chose as her own room, because it was from that window only that a view could be had of the hideous brick tomb sn which lies the mortal part of the General.

A Man Adopted by Rabbits.

There is an old man out in Mound Valley, Nev., a local paper says, who has been adopted by a lot of jack rabbits. Their friendliness and good feeling have become so obtrusive that the old fellow would be thankful if something would happen to alienate their affections. But the rabbits have developed such a liking for civilization that they are about to take possession of his house, and have even begun to rear their broods in it, so that the old man hardly knows now whether he owns the house or simply lives there with the rabbits.

The Influence of Symbols.

An American, writing home recently from England, says: "I happened to be present at the funeral of a soldier, who, for bravery in the Zulu war, had received the Victoria cross. The badge was fastened to his breast as he lay in the coffic. His mother, bidding him farewell, touched the precious bronze token and said: 'It lessens my grief at losing him that he should take that into his grave !'

"It was the symbol to her not only of his heroic life, but of the gratitude of his country. I wondered, as I heard her, if we Americans make as much use as we might of the influence of symbols in training our uneducated

A singular instance of the effect of this kind of symbolism was once shown in the famous reformatory school at Lusk. One of the teachers had induced about twenty of the boys to give up profane and indecent lanfluage, and to do extra work, for which they were paid. But they were indifferent and half-hearted in the effort.

"Form them into a society and give them a badge," suggested the superintendent. The hint was carried out. In month the boys were eager and enthusiastic in their work, and as proud of their prison society as were the old soldiers of Napoleon of the Legion of The man who is successful in leading

One hundred and forty miles from the northwest coast of Scotland, and forty miles from the nearest land, the extreme point of the Hebrides Island, lies a little archipelage or group of islands, called the Hirt or Hirst, and more commonly known by the name of one of the islands, St. Kilda. St. Kilda is almost a lost island, so far is it out on the broad Atlantic, so completely deserted by the rest of the world, and so wildly beaten upon by the storms. But in spite of its remoteness, and the fact that the island has but a very small extent of cultivable soil, St. Kilda is inhabited by 19 families, numbering in 1881, seventy-seven souls. The strange and lonely life that these people live here is a matter of pity even for the poor and almost deserted inhabitants of the Hebrides, who have a large and populous region compared with St. Kilds. But not only is the population of St. Kilda as large as it was in the middle of the last century, in spite of the unhealthiness of the people's way of life and a very high death rate, but the island has sent a few emigrants to Australia.

of fits, brought on, the doctors believe, by the peculiar food given them. From the day of their birth they are made to swallow a decoction of oil taken from the petrel, mixed with port wine. Out intancy.

St. Kilda is formed almost wholly of steep cliffs, rising to a height of 1220 feet, and access to it is only possible through a cleft in the rocks. Vessels approach it only during the three months of summer. Only during these three months are any mails received on the island, and formerly the case was still worse, for the royal subjects of the Queen at St. Kilda did not hear of King William IV.'s death, and Victoria's accession to the throne, until three years after the event.

Some time ago a dreadful tempest raged at St. Kilda, and the inhabitants having lost much of their property and being in distress, and having several months to wait before the mail boat would reach them, wrote the story of their sufferings, put it in a bottle as the survivors of a wreck at sea sometimes do, and threw it into the water. The bottle was picked up, delivered into the hands of the directors of the Free Kirk of Scotland, Edinburgh, to whom it was addressed, and a small steamer was

A Deformed Prince.

The King of Germany's eldest son and heir to the throne is Prince Wilhelm, of whom the Countess von Krockow writes: "The Germans cannot forgive an heir apparent of the throne having been born mediocre in figure and perfectly formed. Prince Wilhelm has a crippled arm. The fingers are mere knobs. In the hussar uniform there is a pocket, and he wears it because the three fingers of the helpless member can be hung in the pocket. A Faithful Sheperd. The following beautiful tradition about Moses has been handed down to posterity: He had the flocks of his father-in-law. One day, while he was contemplating his flock in the desert. he saw a lamb leave the herd, and rat further and further away. The tender sheperd not only followed it with his eyes, but went after it. The lamb quickened its steps, hopped over bills, sprang over ditches, hastened through valley and plain; the sheperd unweariedly followed its track. At last the lamb stopped by a spring, at which !! eagerly quenched its burning thirs. Moses hastend to the spot, looked sadly at the drinking lamb and said : "It was thirst then, my poor beast, which tormented thee, and drove thee from me, and I didn't understand; now thou art faint and weary from the long, hard way, and thy powers are exhausted: how then couldst thou return alone to thy comrades ?" After the lamb had quenched its thirst and seemed undecided what road to take. Moses lifted it to his shoulder, and, bending under the heavy burden, strode back to the fick. Then he heard the voice of God calling to him, saying : "Thou hast a tender heart for my creatures ; thou art a kind. gentle shepherd to the flocks of man :thou art now called to feed the flocks

One Glass of Wine.

A glass of wine, for instance, changed the history of France for nearly twenty years. Louis Philippe, King of the French, had a son, the Duke of Orleans, and heir to the throne, who always drank only a certain number of glasses of wine, because even one more made him tipsy. On a memorable morning he forgot to count the number of glasses and took one more than usual. When entering his carriage he stumtled, frightening the horses and causing them to run. In attempting to leap from the carriage his head scruck the pavement and he soon died. That glass of wine overthrew the Orleans rule, confiscated their property of 120. 000,000, and sent the whole family into exile.
