Hopeless Hoyt.

A Harrisburg special to the Pittsburg Dispatch says: Ex-Governor Hoyt having been asked Saturday what he thought of the Presidential political situation, said the nomination of Blaine seemed inevitable, in view of the multiplicity of Republican candidates strug-gling for the Presidency. The party would take him as its standard-bearer because it was afraid to risk the running of any other man. As to the prospects of the Republican party for success, they were far from encouraging. The waving of the "bloody shirt" was the only scheme that could make victory possible for the Republican party. It had been tried often with good political results, and if shoved to the front

He had no idea it would be made the battle cry, as the party seemed to regard the tariff as the issue on which the Presidential fight should be made. He had very little faith in it. Neither party would be materially affected by it, as the subject had been so often discussed in previous campaigns with out making much impression on the voter The position taken on the liquor question w the Republicans would greatly hurt them. New York had been made irreclaimably mocratic by the attitude of his party on the subject of high license and Probibition. Mr. West, a member of Congress from In the city he would not be surprised to see a majority at the Presidential election of 100,000 for the Democratic ticket. This largely increased majority would in a great measure be due to the interference of the Republicans with the traffic in liquor. New Jersey would also go Democratic for similar reasons. Enough political changes would be made in the city of Newark alone to defeat the Republicans in the State, owing to the large German Republican population which would vote the Democratic ticket, on account of the high license and Prohibition legislation passed at the last session of the Legislature.

The Republicans would also sustain great losses in this State because of their attitude on the liquor question. The majority in Philadelphia in November would be greatly reduced, and ultimately Pennsylvania would be carried by the Democrats, on account of the mistaken political policy of the dominant party.

Governor Hoyt thinks Cleveland will be his own successor. He will probably not get as large an Independent Republican vote as he did four years ago, but many of the Irish voters, who supported Blaine in that campaign, will return to the Democratic fold. In the event of Blaine's nomination, many of this class of voters, the Governor says, will stand by the Maine man, but their number will not be sufficiently large to endanger any Democratic State. The Republicans have a much better show of carrying the lower House of Congress than the Presidency. Cleveland is stronger than in 1884. He will get a large church vote, and the action of the Methodists on the robibition question will help him by swelling the Republican Prohibition vote Southern States, as usual, will all go Democratic, although the Republicans may gain a few Congressmen in that section of the

The Vice Presidency.

The assumption that the nomination tated by the President, is simply an absuraity. He has been suggested and pressed rather by those least in sympathy with Cleveland than by the special friends of the Administration, and his exceptional position in the party and before the country gives him high qualities of availability. His is the only nomination that would make Ohio a debatable State, while it would rally the Democratic Old Guard throughout the whole country.

The threatened complications in Indiana with Governor Gray as the candidate for Vice President; the like complications made by the opposing aims of Black and Morrison, in Illinois : the complacations which must confront holders under President Cleveland, naturally directed Democratic sentiment toward some one who towers above the strewn along the track for inteen bundred feet.
