

How We Catch Cold.

Cold is not the only factor in the production of catarrh. There is a collateral cause, and a most important one, in certain depressed conditions of the nervous system, which is too little known and appreciated. In healthy conditions of the nervous system, provided reasonable precautions are taken against cold, there is enough vitality in the organism to resist its injurious influence. The nervous system is, in fact, the guardian, controller and prime regulator of animal heat or body temperature, and its slightest failure to fulfill its responsible duties—the least relaxation of its constant vigilance—renders us liable to fall a prey to cold.

The following suppositions cases will afford an illustration:

An individual who habitually drives about in an open conveyance, with perfect freedom from catarrh, happens on one occasion to fall asleep, when he is out, and the next day he has a cold. The explanation of this is a cold. The explanation of this is a cold. The explanation of this is a cold.

A timid woman comes home some night pale and ghastly with fright, having encountered a "ghost." In a day or two she develops a cold, for which she cannot in any way account. Fear acts as a depressant to the nervous system, crippling its powers of resisting the action of cold; it hence the phrase, "shivering with fear."

Story of a Headless Man.

We have observed several wonderful stories of the Chinese executioners who, it is said, can strike off the head of their victims so skillfully that the poor fellows themselves never discover their loss until a moment or two after they are dead. We recall to mind, however, the story of a German executioner who far surpassed the Chinese in professional dexterity. Upon one occasion it happened that a criminal had a singular itching to play at nine-pins, and he implored permission to play once more from his favorite game before he died. Then, he said, he would submit to his fate without a murmur. The judge, thinking there could be no harm in honoring him, granted his last prayer, and upon arriving at the place of execution he found everything prepared for the game, the pins being set up and the balls all ready. He commenced his favorite sport with enthusiasm. After awhile the sheriff observing that he showed no inclination to desist, made a sign to the executioner to strike the fatal blow while he stooped for a bowl. The executioner did so, but with such exquisite dexterity that the culprit did not notice or feel it. A Remarkable Wagon.

A remarkable wagon has been invented in the far West. It has four wheels of equal size, and perhaps, five feet in diameter, on which to run. Above the hind wheels are seats for passengers and a bed for freight. In front of this bed are attached the forward axle and cog and balance wheels, and above them, on a frame is a large cog wheel, one revolution of which turns a small cog wheel fastened to the axle a dozen or more times.

Much was expected of the machine by the inventor, who was positive it would outrun a locomotive across the desert, and revolutionize the carrying trade, as neither fuel nor power of any kind was required to keep it going when once started.

Interfering in Horses.

The subject of interfering naturally interests good owners of horses and should interest shoers to that extent that they will give it enough attention to be able to overcome it in most cases. There are several reasons why horses interfere; one is particularly with colts and young horses, too much work in a given time, either on the road and farm, especially in hot weather; another is, too little nourishing food for the animal that is asked to do so much work in a given time; and the greatest reason, I freely admit, says G. H. Quincy, in the New Hampshire Mirror, is improper shoeing, for of all the bungling that I have ever seen in shoeing the greatest has been in regard to interfering. When I commenced to shoe horses I was taught to pare the feet the lowest on the outside, the idea being that by so doing the ankles would be further to one side, so that the opposite foot could pass it without biting. The first case of interfering that I had I adopted the above plan. The horse struck more than ever. I then used shoes with the inside much thicker than the outside, so as to tip the feet out still more. The result was that the horse interfered more yet.

THE HAUNTED CLOCK.

In a farm-house near Devon, Pa. there is a haunted clock, with a weird legend of revolutionary times connected with it. A cold-blooded murder of a drummer in the act, and once a year "the clock acts strangely" and cannot be made to go. This is a true story, you understand, and I believe the story. I know that "haunted clock." I have met it in a Pennsylvania tavern more than once. Only the legend doesn't do the haunted clock full justice. Not only once a year, on the anniversary of the drummer's death, does it "act strangely." It acts strangely all the time. It chokes and gurgles in ghastly guttural for about five minutes before it strikes, and heard, in the dead of night, these awful sounds petrify the terrified guest with horror, for he firmly believes that the man in the next room is hanging himself with his suspenders. When the haunted clock strikes eleven, it starts with loud ponderous solemnity and strikes six. Then it stops, groans twice, gurgles, makes a rattled noise with something that needs oil, strikes one wheeze and goes to sleep. About 11:30, however, it wakes up, grunts, sneezes twice, strikes the other four, and with a hollow groan goes on its limping with tick tocks, of alternating loudness and softness, sometimes falling asleep and missing two or three ticks altogether, always waking with a start and tick tocking very loudly for the next minute. And then, along in the afternoon, when you are anxious to go to the station to catch the five o'clock train, the hour hand points to three and the minute hand is at five and the clock strikes nine, you know it is a quarter past six and your train has gone more than an hour ago. There is also a calendar on this clock, showing the days of the week and the months, but it is stuck fast between Monday and Tuesday at the 31st of January, and there is a hole in the dial where a moon shows itself in the full dark all the year round. O, it is sure 'nough haunted clock. I've seen it, many a time, and have missed more trains by it than there are people in Virginia or "henge" in Indiana. Everybody about the hotel "sets" that clock. The landlord looks at it about once or twice a week and sets it by a silver watch that looks like a slung shot. Then by and by the oldest boy comes along and sets it by the school bell, which rings about nine o'clock. Then the porter-hostler comes along and sets it "by the sun." And, finally, the landlady comes in and sets it "by guess." And the old clock, remarking, "None of these things move me," haunts on in the same distracted, time-killing old way as of old.
