Not To Be Divided. The Pittsburgh Dispatch of Wednesday morning contains a column of matter about the division of the Pittsburgh and Allegheny Catholic dioceses. Among the other things it says:

"On July 16th Rev. Father Kittell, of Haldysburg, called for Ireland. He is, or rather was, one of the principal advocates of the creation of two dioceses instead of one. Before he left he arranged to have called to him any information that might be received from Rome in regard to the question. If it was at all favorable, or if he left the matter in an uncertain condition, he was to go from Ireland direct to Italy and appear before the ecclesiastical authorities of the Vatican. He had not anticipated that the advice would finally dispose of the case, and against that. Such the result, however, and now Father Kittell, will be called by his friends not to Rome, as it would be of no use."

The Dispatch continues thus: "This, conceivably, is a victory for the large and influential element who desire to preserve the integrity of the Pittsburgh diocese, for Bishop Tuig is directly opposed to the movement to divide it. He is the man who, more than any other, restored the two dioceses to financial solvency. His opposition to the division took place in 1875. The church's finances were then in a deplorable state. His skillful management brought everything around all right. The reference of the whole matter now, by such high authorities, to Bishop Tuig exclusively, is evidenced by his many friends as a most compliment in recognition of his valuable services. Very few of the priests in this city have ever been in favor of the proposed division."

"It seems the Allegheny diocese, almost to a man, have been the chief advocates of the proposed restoration of the Allegheny diocese. They are scattered all over Cambria, Blair and Westmoreland counties. The Catholic church, following in the footsteps of the Protestants, who were among the pioneers of the western slope of the Alleghenies, and Cambria county is now a stronghold of Catholicism, contributing 25,000 souls to the membership of the Pittsburgh diocese. The leading priest in this mountain region is Rev. E. S. Bore, of Loretto. Rev. Father Kittell was selected to present the case at Rome, personally if necessary, because he had been in the eternal city before, and was familiar with the Roman methods. Rev. Father Boyle, of Gallitzin, and others in the same neighborhood were quite active in this matter."

"The papers they forwarded to Rome contained a statement of the condition of the diocese and the advantages which would be derived if the old Allegheny diocese should be restored. There are financial questions involved, such as contributions to the orphan asylums and other institutions, which led to the conclusion to have them would get better attention if the diocese were out in two."
