Breed for what you want-There is such a thing as born inclination. The trotting blood is born to go, and hence they do not like the restraint of going slow and doing the drudgery work on the farm. They fret and fume and soon wear themselves out and one who uses them. The heavy draft horses are born with an inclination to walk and work. They draw loads as naturally as the runners and trotters dance and prance. The draft horses crossed on mares with good dispositions make horses naturally gentle and kind and easy to break in. All you have to do go ahead i e., after they have been handled. The more active blood must be curbed and trained, and then the greatest care must be had or they will be spoiled for workers, as it's against na-

Stallions Fight.

The Cincinnati Enquirer has a Vincennes, Ind., special describing a rattling fight between two stallions. The animals were being exhibited at a fair, when a team of horses ran away and darted among the blooded stock. Instantly all was commotion. The blood mares began neighing, which the two atallions seemed to interpret as a sort of battle cry. They broke away from their keepers and dashed at each other like mad. Both snorted terribly, and the fire seemed to fiash from their eyes. With open jaws they bit each other's necks, pawing and tearing up the ground for a space of twenty feet. At last, by some means, they got loose, and each backing a few feet, they whirled and commenced kicking each other. The starp corks on the hind shoes drew blood from the flanks of each and left enormous welts and cuts. Then one of them, with an instinct that seemed human, suddenly whirled to the right and grabbed his opponent by the neck' trying at the same time to get his fore feet upon his shoulders. They struggled, the sweat and blood pouring from their wounds.

The farmers about were panic stricken. A couple of cowboys got stout ropes and tried to lasso them. This was no easy effort, and attended with conziderable danger. Before it was accomplished the animals made a final vicious dash at each other, and while linked in each others' ferocious embrace, the cowboys got in their work, and succeeded in securing them. They were delivered over to the keepers, who led them away covered with blood, limping, lame, and sore.

A CERTAIN number of men are calm, even lived, sensible and practical. Men of that class are almost certain to write plain, round hands, in which every letter is legible; neither very much slanted forward, nor tilted backward, no letter very much bigger than its neighbor nor with heads much above or tails much below the letters not so distinguished, the letters all having the same general uprightness and the lines true to the edges of the papers, neither tending upward nor downward, Exact, business like people will have an exact handwriting. Fantastic minds revel in quirks and streamers, particularly for the capital letters, and this quailty is not infrequent in certain business bands, as if the writers found a relief from the prosaic nature of their work in giving flourishes to certain letters. Firm, decided, downright men are apt to bear on pen when writing, and to make strokes hard and thick. On the contrary, people who are not sure of themselves, and are lacking self-control, press unevenly, and with anxious looking, scratchy hands. Ambitious people are apt to be overworked; they are always in haste and always forget to cross their t's or dot their l's.

They are also apt to run the last few letters of every word into an illegible serawl. Flurried, troubled and conscience-twinged persons have a crabbed and uneven handwriting.

The Worm that Helps Farmers.

A worm has been recently imported into Louisiana from the West Indies for the purpose of destroying the coco or nut grass.

GOODAPPETITE The experiments with this worm have been made in Madison parish, Louisiana, on the plantation of Mr. F. L. Maxwell. This plantation is largely covered with coco grass, which, as many farmers QUIETNERVES know, is a pest that is difficult to deal with. Hearing that this worm had destroyed large tracts of the nut grass in the West Indies, Mr. Maxwell imported ome of the eggs. These eggs were forwarded through the mails on blades of grass covered with damp moss. A SPECIFIC FOR MALARIA. Most of the eggs were spoiled in transit, but a few of them hatched, and Mr. NERVOUS PROSTRATION, Maxwell placed the worms in a putgrass patch. At the end of a week no The most scientific and successful Blood Purifisigns of the worms were seen, and it rr Superior to quinine

But one day Mr. Maxwell noticed that a number of the nut grass plants had begun to wither. Several weeks after this he observed on the under side of the grass blades a number of eggs, the result of the development of the worms. There have been five crops of worms. It is estimated that each moth will lay a million eggs, and at this rate a few crops of worms will cover a comparatively large area. On Mr. Maxwell's plantation they have destroyed about ten acres of nut grass since the middle of May, and are still vigorously at work. When the worm issues from the egg it makes its way down the blade of grass, eating as it goes, enters the ground, follows the root until it reaches the nut and bores its way in, thus destroying the vitality of the grass.

Naturally, Mr. Maxwell is very enthusiastic over his success in destroying the pestiferous nut grass, and he desires to distribute the eggs over the South wherever the grass has secured a foot-hold. This would be a very good thing, if the farmers could be sure that the activity of this remarkable worm would cease with the destruction of the nut grass; but what will be the history of the worm after the nut grass has disappeared? This may prove to be a very important question in the future, for it is possible, though we hope it is not probable, that this worm may prove to be a worse pest than the nut grass itself, which is bad enough.

The English sparrow experiment is a case in point, though we are bound to say that the worms are more valuable than the sparrow. The worms were imported to kill nut grass, and they have surpassed all anticipation. The sparrow was imported to kill insects, but insects are about the only things it doesn't at tack. It may be that the West Indian worm, after destroying the nut grass, may turn its attention to other vegetation, but it is not to be hoped that after it has served its purposes in the nut grass patches it will disappear,

Eating Singed Flesh.

I went into one of the stone-built recesses, where several of our Tarters were couching around a small grass root fire, and was considerably edified by watching them cooking and dispatching their morning repast. To begin with, a very dirty copper vessel was put on the fire and filled with some green weed-like nettles, barley, flour and water. While one of the men stirred this pottage round and round with a wooden ladle another produced some raw meat-a bit of the dog I had shot. This he proceeded to tear up into small strips and throw them on the fire, every now and then popping a raw lump into his mouth and masticating it with the greatest gusto. Even the bits on the fire were quickly disposed of after being nearly singed. As soon as the pottage was considered ready it was ladled out into little wooden cups like the whisky "quaighs" of the highlands. After being replenished again and again until the pot was emptied the cups were carefully licked clean and redeposited where they had been before the meal. Another course of flesh was about to be partaken of after the manner of the first, but a regard for my appetite for breakfast prevented my waiting to see the performance. These bardy Tartars are quite independent of any other dishes beyond their little wooden bowls. In these they mix their suttoo (meal made from barley) with a little water and salt and made an expeditious repast of it whenever they feel hungry. Indeed this kind of uncooked porridge seems to be their staple food.

A Chinese Oplum Story.

Since the introduction of opium into China millions and tens of millions have given themselves up to its use, its victims being found in all the ranks and conditions of life, among the old, the middle aged, the young, and even chils dren. A made a specialty of manufacturing for the domesman and his wife had been in the habit of taking oplum for years, and one of Illimuninating : and : Lubricating : Oils, their chief delights was in indulging themselves over the pipe in each other's company, each taking alternace whiffs. One day the woman gave birth to a boy, and all the household was in an ecstatic state of joyfulness. But before long the baby began to show signs of illness, and glthough a physician was sent for they could not discover the cause of its symptons. Every effort was made to Trade for Ebensburg and Visave the child, but he only grew worse and worse until his parents gave him up

In despair they took their pipe to solace themselves, and behold! as they puffed at the pipe the smoke was wafted to the child's nostrils, and, giving a sneeze, he instantly revived and began to cry. Is the good old days of the Spanish aristocracy the egg-shells to be used by proud grandees at swell fand angoes were filled with gold and diamond dust. Similar extravagances are sometimes indulged in nowadays, but rarely. Occasionally small gold coins, charms, pear's, opals, or spiced candies are stuffed in with the chopped tinsel, making the advertisement very expen sive. One can buy very pretty cascarand it is quite the correct thing for a belle or a beau to go to a ball armed with several dozen of them.

Often the shells are hand-painted or otherwise beautifully decorated, much like Easter eggs in the north. Society matrons who propose giving balls during the cascarone season have the shells of all the eggs used in the household carefully saved for the purpose, and many an hour is spent by herself and friends in filling and decorating them. The act of breaking a cascarone on another's head is considered a compliment to the recipient, who feels in duty bound to return the honor at the first oppportunity. Previous acquaintance is not essential, it being of itself a sort of informal introduction. Thus any Mexican lady may literally make a "mash" on every strange gentleman who pleases her, and without offending her countrymen's extremely sensitive notions of propriety.

It was my lot to be seated just behind this woman, and I very soon observed that something was annoying her. She fidgetted in her seat, looked out of the window, then swerved around and glanced down the car, and finally she pressed the electric button to summon the porter.

The stranger in Mexico, especially if he be young and good looking, is liable to be considirably surprised at hir first ball here, when some pretty senorita, whom he has never seen before, trips up to him with an engaging smile on her face and something that looks like an egg in her hand, and suddenly smashes the latter over his cranium. To one not acquainted with the cascarone custom it is startling, to say the least. Luckily, however, the egg has been roboed of its usual interior, the original cantents having been emptied through a small hole at one end. The shell is then refilled with finely chopped tinsel and colored paper, perhaps with the addition of perfumed satchet powder or some dainty trinkets, after which the opening in neatly closed

A blind man got on the train at Harrisburg -recently, says the Pittsburg Dispatch, and found a seat in the parlor car. -A traveler in Norway says that the horses in that country have a very sensible way of taking their food, which perhays might be beneficially followed here. They have a bucket of water put down beside the allowance of hay. It is interesting to see with what relish they take a sip of the one and a mouthful of the other alternately, sometimes only moistening their mouths, as a rational being would do while eating a dinner of such dry food. A broken-winded horse is scarcely ever seen in Norway, and the question is if this mode of feeding has not something to do with the preservation of the animal's respiratory organs.
