Making Plaster Statues.

A section of the femous Verus d Mile stood on the floor as a News reporter entered a plaster-of- Paris statuary establishment on Grand street New York city. On the second floor was the gallery, which exhibited the statues produced by the concern, and the low basement served as a workshop. Two Italians were busy on the figure, which was to be ten feet high and to grace a niche in the wall of a South Am ricin's house.

The men were cementing the four sections composing the statue together. Figures as large as this are invariably cast in parts or sections. To cast the that the most delicate stomach will bear. whole figure together involves too much ASPECIFIC FOR MALARIA, Palona. The Prince s is a beautiful and exposure to damage in handling. To make the first mould of a figure requires considerable time and costs a deal of money. For this purpose a skillful sculptor has to be secured and he makes the prototype from clay. The clay statue is first covered with oil.

It is then placed face upward in the lower half of a flask, divided in sections and filled with plaster of Paris, After the plaster adhering to the back half of Italians alona serve in establishments of this kind ; men of other nationalifies, being unable to perform the work without too much breakage, cannot obtain employment in them. The proprietor stated that casts of live faces were never taken because the risk of destroying the casts was too great, but it was a common thing to east dead faces.

"It is somewhat of a fad among sociaty people to have casts of their hands and feet," explained the proprietor. * We charge $5 and upward for the cast of a hand or foot and for that of a dead face $10, $15 and 20. All the plaster of Paris that we use comes from Newark, N. J. It is made by pulverising a soft white stone and afterward steaming it We mix nothing but waller with the plaster."

How to Drink Tea.

As commonly prepared, tea is bitter and disagreeable that the addition of utilk becomes almost necessary to make it pulatable. But to put milk or cream into properly prepared tea is to commit. an anpardonable gastrenomic solscism ... not only for the fanciful resson that a chemical compound results from the mixture recembling the basis of leather but that the basis of milk disguises the pecultar aroma of tea and makes one kind taste almost exactly like another, yery much in the same way as French Corn. Bean and Phosphate cooks sometimes speil the natural flavor of fish with their eternal sauces till you are unable to tell whether you are eating salmon or shark, catfish or dogfish. Sugar, on the other hand, may and should be added to tea, for it makes the tea more agreeable without in the least interfering with its fragrance. Milk and tea soon become very insipid to the sense of those who have accustomed themselves to drink plain ten. Moreover, there is a special enjoyment to be derived from each kind of tea, and how actually the sense of ameil can be educated in the art of discriminating teas is shown in the case of professional tea tasters, who can distinguish not only the country and the locality where the leaves are grown, but the year and season, and even the ship that brought them across the ocean. Honey Dew. Honey dew is a viscid, saccharine matter which exudes from the stems and leaves of plants, both trees and herbaceous plants. Its presence is usually, not always, ascribed to the aphides and other insects which feed on the juices of plants, puncturing them to extract their sap. Dry, warm weather seems to be necessary for the production in the sap of that superabundance of sugar which is thus thrown off. Honey dew is often so abundant as to fall in drops from leaf to another, sometimes even falling from trees in a coptons shower. Orange and lemon groves frequently suffer great injury from honey dew, since, drying on the leaves, it coats them with a film of clammy substance, to which everything brought by the atmosphere adheres, clogging the pores of the plant. A brass knuckle, as the name signifies, is always made of brass, and hard brass at that, about half an inch thick. Four holes are cast in it, through which the fingers are passed in such a manner as to have the neck of the dange or fender pass between the middle fingers. The flange rests against the palm of the right hand, and besides adding force and firmness to the blow, protects the fingers from the concussion of the blow. It may well be called an ugly weapon. for, in the hands of an ordinarily strong man, a blow from it will fracture a man's skull as easily as though he were struck with a hammer. Without the flange or fender, the blow would be almost as disastrous to the striker as to the stricken, as the force of the blow would then fall upon the knuckles, whereas by the arrangement described there is a free space maintained between the inner parts of the finger holes and the fingers themselves.

This is the ordinary brass knuckle, but the most terrible of all is the spiked knuckle. The finger portion is ornamented with five or six pyramid shaped projections, about three quarters of an inch long. What the result of a slanting blow with such a weapon would be can be more easily imagined than described.

Another weapon which, while it can not be called a brass knuckle, is equally as danerous and would come under the same head, is a short bar of iron, about an inch in diameter, and just long enough to be held firmly in the hands. Pointed ends project about an inch from each side of the fist. With this a sidewise punching blow is administered, or it is brought down upon the victim's head like a hammer, and will punch a hole as neatly as with a punch.

Another equally dangerous weapon in vogue in England years ago, and from which the knuckle duster evidently sprung, is the spiked ring. Fist fights are essentially English, and one of the oldest tricks of mea so engaged was to roughen the hands with rosin or to wear a heavy ring. The heavy ring was a favorite device with the rougher characters, and noting its frightful work some more villainous rough fashioned out the spiked ring.

Mutton for the fable.

The same breeding, feeding and care will produce a higher quality of mutton than of beef or pork. Both beef and pork are occasionally from diseased animals, and human beings often contract scrofula and tuberculosis by partaking of them, while this appalling feature is never attributed to mutton. Mutton agrees with the digestive organs better than the other meats and own to produced sheaper. Ten lambs can be grown in six months that will dress as much meat as a steer at two years of age. They will consome no bay or grain, simply pasture, but the steer has to be pastured two seasons, fed hay two winters and grain one. The lambs consume no more grass than the steer does in his second summer and when sold they bring more money. In case of the lambs the money is returned in six months and the steer in- two years-a large gain in interest for the lamos. The first cost of the lambs is not so much as that of the steer, for their ewe mothers produce fleeces to pay their way and the steer's niother has to be raised to at least two years of age without returning anything. In comparison with the cost of pork there is not so much difference, but it is in favor of the lambs.

A simple and cheap way of training tomatoes, and especially adapted to limited space, is thus described: Set the plants in even rows about three feet apart. As soon as large enough, hill well, and close to each plant drive a forked stick, leaving about three feet aboya the ground. On the fork place long poles firmly. To these train the vines, tying with strings, and nip off the shoots that grow too far above them. By this means every fruit will be fine, free from mud, even when heavy rains fall, and the vines keep in bearing till late in autumn. The plants are more prolific, and but little fruit is lost, as is so often the case when the vines rest on the ground. In case of early frosts, double sheets of news papars hung over the trallises will prop Aset the tomatoes until gathered.
