

Ocean Cables.

There are now ten cables across the Atlantic, and their location and condition are about as well known by those who have to do with them as though they were exposed to view for the entire distance.

It has been said of Captain Trott, the well-known cable fisherman, that he knows the mountains and valleys, lanes and avenues of the ocean as well as a cabman knows the streets of London. Crossing the Atlantic on one occasion with his repair steamer, and realizing that he was in the vicinity of the spot where a stretch of cable had been lost by another company's steamer some time previous, the captain set to work, picked up the cable within an hour or two, and delivered it to its owner upon his arrival in port.

There are now throughout the world over 116,000 miles of submarine cables, with nearly 125,000 miles of conductors. All cables are tested before leaving the factory. When put on shipboard, the ship's electrician is in constant communication with the shore through all the cable on the ship. The slightest fault is detected just as soon as it goes into the water. Paying out is immediately stopped, and the cable repaired. You could not see a pinhole in the insulation, but it can be located by the gas testing instruments, sometimes within a quarter of a mile, in the entire stretch of 2,000 miles.

Aside from electrical considerations, it is believed that armor or iron protection wires are necessary for protection from chafing on the rocks, and from the teeth of the parasite, and the cable at the bottom of the sea is no exception. Cables have been taken up from a depth of a mile and a half with the hemp covering badly eaten away, and at a depth of over half a mile strong currents of the ocean have rasped the armored wires on the rocky bottom.

Experience has not yet determined the full lasting qualities of electric cables. Specimens have been taken up which show signs of deterioration after having been in the water for more than thirty-five years. Water, and especially salt water, seems to be a preserver of insulating compounds.

Raising Good Horses.

Just now there is no one crop produced on the farm that brings to the profit realized from well bred horses. The farmer is invited to look over the whole field and then say if it is not so. Now is the demand for all for one kind by any manner of means. All that is called for is something good; be it roaster, carriage or draft. The day of the scrub in horse breeding has passed, that is to say, the demand all along the buying line being for something good, the producer, the farmer breeder must, in order to meet the market, produce what is wanted, if he wishes to breed and sell at a profit. There is room for all the good breeds known to American farmers because they each have a place which they can fill to advantage. The farmer who trots off to town with a span of 1,900 pound Percherons or Clydes horses not alone his good sense but, his thrift, because when called upon they will pull a heavier load over the road, be it good or bad, than a pair of little miserable scrubs. On the same principle the man who has a pair of Cleveland bays in front of his barouche or carriage, has style, pluck, courage and grit. They can get over the ground at a ten-mile pace for hours without feeling fatigue, and then after feeding and a bit of rest, turn around and go back again. And what is true of these is preeminently true of the American trotter in whom we have a concentration of courage and vim, a plucky and enduring fellow that will measure up so fast as the road will permit, and never give up so long as the power of endurance lasts.

But let us be friendly one with the other. Every man to his taste. We do not all care for trotters, some even believe it sinful to breed a horse that can outstrip his neighbor on the road, much more show him on the race track. Sinful men have queer views of other men's practices, but tolerate their own with a graciousness that is both child-like and human. They forget the old maxim, "There are none good," but are carried away with a species of righteousness unknown to any but themselves. Be it then our duty to breed only the best, seeing that whatever we produce of that character is wanted at paying and profitable prices, and that it is the horse's turn just now. Once it was hemp and tobacco, then it was Southern cattle; these were for a short time overshadowed by the Herefords, then the black doddies came to the front until we exhausted the beef cattle supply. The noblest Roman of them all was the field to-day, and the demand is for good horses.

Wonderful Egypt.

The Egyptians should be the richest instead of the poorest people in the world. What a wonderful country they have! It is a valley of guano in the world as your hat and if now terms with crops as green as grass in June. It produces from two to three crops every year, and its soil gives out through the ages bounteous crops with no other fertilizer than this water of the Nile. Egypt is the gift of the Nile and a wonderful gift it is. The country under the Khedive to-day is the narrowest kingdom of the world. Extending between eight and nine hundred miles above Cairo its cultivable soil is nowhere more than nine miles wide, and below here it spreads out in a great, green fan, the ribs of which are each a little more than 100 miles long and the top of which does not measure much more than 200 miles. This fan is the famed Delta of the Nile, and with this long narrow valley above it, makes the Egypt to-day. On the sides of this valley are great tracts of desert of sand of a glaring yellow silver, more sterile than the plains of Colorado or the alkali plains of the Rockies. The Egyptian desert is absolutely bare. The rich fields of Egypt come to its edge on either side and you can step from the greenest of grass on the driest of sand, and standing on the green with your face toward the desert, far as the eye can reach, see nothing but the bleak, bare sand.

The whole of the soil of Egypt has been brought down from the mountains of Abyssinia by the Nile. It is nowhere more than fifty feet deep and its average depth is about thirty-five feet. Under this soil is found the sand. The Nile waters it as well as fertilizes it, for there is no rain to speak of in Egypt. The country is flat. Aye at Cairo you can see for miles in every direction, and standing on the great Pyramid, the valley of the Nile is spread out below you in a great patchwork of different shades of green. There are no fences and few trees, here and there a grove of tall palm trees, their fanlike heads high up in the clear blue atmosphere, and near them you see a village or hamlet made of the same sun dried sticks that Pharaoh ground out of the children of Israel. This great plain is cut up by canals, roads run here and there through it, and along these move caravans of camels, of Egyptians in gowns upon donkeys and of droves of donkeys laden with grass or grain. There are cattle and sheep by the thousand upon the field and their fat sides glisten under the tropical sun as they munch the sweetest and juiciest of clover. The air just now is as pure as that of Denver. All nature seems to smile and the only poor thing upon the scene is man.

Headache, the commonest of ailments, is due to a bilious state of the system, such as is produced by indigestion, constipation, or overeating. Pain in the side, or a heavy, coated tongue, are also signs of this condition. Even if they are cured.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

Small Pill. Small Dose. Small Price.

Drying Herbs for Future Use.

Herbs that are to be preserved should be collected as soon as they begin to flower and on a dry day after the dew and moisture deposited on them have evaporated. It is better to dry them in the shade, in a situation where they are in a current of dry air, rather than in a heated room or by direct exposure to the rays of the sun. In the latter case they will lose much of their green color, which will affect them unfavorably if intended for sale, while they should be dried quickly to preserve their aromatic qualities. It should be done in such a way as to retain their color as well. The same rule will apply to roots, which should be thoroughly washed before drying. As soon as properly dried cut plants and roots should be packed away in boxes or otherwise so as to exclude them from the air and preserve their valuable properties, whether aromatic or medicinal.

For Home Use the cheap paper bags now so common answer the purpose well. These should be marked with the name of the variety, and be hung up or laid away in a dry place until wanted. Quite a number of plants that might be named are found growing in fields and along roadsides, of which some should be stored and preserved for their medicinal qualities against a time of need. This is something that should not be neglected, otherwise they will quite often be wanted at a season when they are better gathered, and besides they are better for use when dried than when green. The leaves of the well-known savory herbs can usually be sold to butchers and grocers so as to pay quite well for raising and curing them.

Cow and Rattler Fight to a Finish.

A fight to the death between a fine milk cow and a large rattlesnake occurred recently on the farm of Joseph Carter, in Bibb county, Ala.

Mr. Carter had turned his cows into a fresh pasture, where there was some very fine grass which they began to eagerly devour, says a St. Louis paper. As a small ditch ran through the pasture, and on its bank the grass was very thick.

The cows were feeding in a bunch on the bank of this ditch when they scented a rattlesnake and moved away, with the exception of one large black cow. She stood for a moment looking in the direction the snake was supposed to be. The grass was very fine in that direction and the cow soon moved up her mind. She ventured a little further forward, occasionally stopping and looking about her, evidently trying to discover the snake.

She had moved forward perhaps ten feet from the point where the animals first scented danger, when, without the customary warning rattle, the snake struck and buried its fangs in the lower jaw of the cow.

The cow did not run away, but backing slowly a few feet she stood still several moments, lashing her tail from side to side. Then with a mad bellow she plunged forward directly toward the spot where the rattlesnake was lying hidden in the grass.

The snake was on the alert, and again struck, burying its fangs in the animal's nose this time. This seemed to madden the cow, and she plunged forward, trampling the snake in the ground with her feet and trying in vain to pin it with her horns.

The snake was soon cut and trampled to death, and the cow died from the effects of the two bites in a few hours.

Head, Heart and Hand.

Every boy should have his head, his heart and his hand educated. Let this truth never be forgotten.

By the proper education of the head, he will be taught what is good and what is evil, what is wise and what is foolish, what is right and what is wrong.

By the proper education of the heart, he will be taught to love what is good, wise and right, and to hate what is evil, foolish and wrong.

By the proper education of the hand, he will be able to supply his wants, to add to his comforts, and to assist others.

The highest object of a good education are, to reverence and obey God, and to love and serve mankind. Everything that helps us in attaining these objects is of great value; and everything that hinders us is comparatively worthless. When wisdom reigns in the head, and love in the heart, the man is ever ready to do good; and if his executive ability is equal to his enlightened sentiments, order and peace reign, and failure and suffering are almost unknown.

The Bloodhound.

The bloodhound has a much more delicate nose than any other known breed of hound, and can puzzle out a scent under the most adverse conditions. He is remarkable for adhering to the scent on which he is laid. Some years since a pack of staghounds was kept in Derbyshire, and it was no infrequent occurrence for the hunted deer to take refuge among a herd in some park. In this case the pack was whipped off and a couple of bloodhounds laid on, who stuck to the hided deer until they got him clear of the herd, when the pack was again laid on.

The bloodhound is easily entered to hunt anything, and with a strong scent will sometimes absolutely sit down on his haunches for a few seconds and throw tongue in sheer delight. The note is very deep, mellow and prolonged, and may be heard for miles. The bay, or "singing," of a kennel of bloodhounds just before feeding or exercising is most melodious.

The bloodhound was originally so taken up and carried on horseback for a time when the pursuer came to soft ground where the trail was visible. If the horse of that period was faster than the bloodhound, the latter must indeed have been slow.

A Mine of Valuable Wood.

Forty miles above New Orleans is the old bed of the Bonnet Carré crevasse. Fifty years ago the Father of Waters burst his bonds and swept through there to Lake Pontchartrain. Five years ago the State of Louisiana, with the assistance of the Mississippi Valley railroad, rebuilt the Bonnet Carré levee, but it could not restore altogether the conditions prevailing antecedent to the crevasse. The river in the ten years it passed through the swamp piled up the sands against the big cypress forests there. It has left behind a buried forest. The piled up sand has deadened nearly all the trees, and a single mill there now cuts up the lumber from them into shingles with all the rapidity with which that machine works.
