Dangerous Eels.

Some years ago, at Panama, says Wilf. P. Pond in Youd's Companion, I made the acquaintance of a trader, and accepted an offer to accompany him to British Guiana...

The natives are very fond of these fish, but have a great horror of the severe shock they are able to communicate at will, employ a peculiar method in the capture which they call "intoxicating by means of horses."

Lazily swimming along, they would suddenly straighten up, and swim out with a jerk, and then curve the back again. Thus I learned was the action of producing the shock...

The eels, driven from the bottom to the surface by the splashing of the horses, endeavored to defend their territory against the invaders, with the strange means which nature has given them. Rising to the surface they rushed at their foes, not to bite them, but to defend themselves by the discharge of their batteries.

The vivid color of the eels was greatly intensified, and they were disagreeable looking objects as they writhed and curled in the water, while their eyes, unduly prominent when at rest, receded far into the head so as to become almost invisible in their rage at being disturbed.

At first, comparatively few were driven ashore, but in a short time several of the horses, victims to the power of the shocks, were drowned, and gradually the eels became exhausted and seemed to be, as the natives said, "intoxicated." They swam aimlessly around, and were slowly driven toward a narrow part of the pool, where they were secured, as they lay half torpid in the shallows, by means of small harpoons and fibre nets.

Such, however, is the terror inspired by these fish, that the natives are very reluctant to take them from the harpoons, or otherwise touch them until life has been extinct. The electric apparatus of these fish consists of a series of honeycombed looking cells, filled with a thickish, gelatinous fluid, abundantly supplied with nerves, and situated between the head and gills.

As soon as the eels were dead and harmless, they are conveyed to the village where one of the intermittent festivals which appear to come round about every ten years was inaugurated. The women were busy all day making cassava, which is a starch obtained from a plant-root belonging to the Euphorbiaceae, by a rather complicated process.

The sea refuses no river.

Forty Proverbs of the Sea.

He who would learn to pray should go to sea. When one falls into the sea he stays there. When you walk, pray once; when you go to sea, pray twice; when you go to be married, pray three times.

What comes by starboard goes by larboard. Being at sea, sail; being on land, settle. He that will not sail till he have a full, fair wind will lose many a voyage.

Good roller, good sailer. Do good and cast it into the sea; if the fish ignore it, God will know it. If clouds look like hem, get ready to reef your topsails then.

The Heat in Asia. The horror of heat is unknown to us, or indeed to any part of Europe, though Naples and Athens are desperately trying sometimes. But to the native of Scinde, Central Asia, the shores of the Persian Gulf, the sun of Greece is but a trifle.
