White children are much more indulged and considered in this age than ever before, says a writer to the Ladics' Home Journal, they are still the victims of a barbarous custom. I refer to the practice of whipping as punishment. Though it has long since been largely abolished in our own and other countries as a most inhuman mode of punishment, little children are still beaten, cuffed and spanked by fond (?) parents In a most unconscionable manner. It la pretty generally conceded that cuffing children on the head or ears is frequently fraught with the most serious results-many cases of deafness and even brain disease having arisen from this practice. Evils quite as grave, I am assured by a lady physician of extensive practice, result from the punishment known as "spanking." Blows given with more or less severity and frequency in the region of the spine will, she contends, cause serious brain or spinal trouble. Moreover, the state of the brain and nervous system have a great effect upon the disposition, and the shock which may possibly cure one fault may, by disordering and deranging the nervous system, produce faults of much graver and more complicated

Seed Corn.

It is the usual rule for farmers in saving corn seed to select that most thoroughly ripened. This, says a prominent agricultural paper is wise, because it tends to make the crop earlier, but it is not necessary to make the seed grow that the corn should be glazed. Unripe corn, if thoroughly dried, will shrivel badly, but it will grow not only as quickly, but possibly even more so, than that which has fully matured. It is easier to select the first ears early in the season than after harvest, and by selecting very early the corn may be so thoriughly dried, before cold weather that it will be impossible for cold to injure it if moisture is kept from it. The greater dryness of shrunken grains protects their vitality from being injured. Otherwise, plump, matured seed should naturally produce the best results, as it does with most grains.

The Indian Chost Feast.

Several hundred Blackfeet Sloux arrived at Lincoln, Dakota, recently and at night held a grand ghost feast. Among the curious ceremonies of the Sioux the ghost feast is held in great reverence. It will soon be abolished by order of the Indian agent, and, like the sun dance, will be buried with the traditions of the past. The feast is given by the relatives of those who have died or been killed in battle. At the feast held at Lincoln there were six ghosts, represented by six stakes about four feet in length, set up in the ground within the medicine lodge. A piece of buckskin was sewed over the top of the stakes, upon which eyes, nose, mouth, etc., were marked to represent the head.

Fifteen Indians, with the big medicine man of the village, were seated in a teepee smoking, but rarely speaking to each other. Some live coals were brought and placed before the medicine man, who threw upon them wild sage brush, and holding some pemmican in the smoke chanted a song. Little children were brought in, and received this meat to eat, and some had their ears pierced. The pemmican was also given to the others in the lodge, and some was placed at the feet of the ghost. Outside the lodge hundreds of Indians were gathered, forming groups of a dozen or so, bucks, squaws and children in their respective places. All were feasted with a menu known only to Indians. Around the outside of the medicine lodge horizontal poles were placed, and to these the presents which the ghosts were to distribute were suspended, consisting of blankets, leggings, beaded moccasins, tobacco bags, eagle feathers, etc. After remaining for some time in view, they were removed and placed about the ghosts in the lodge. The relatives now entered the lodge to commune with the departed spirits, and the presents were diss tributed to the favored ones.

The squaws sang and cried and made great exhibition of their grief. They cut their flesh with knives, suffering excruciating pains without a murmur to appease the wrath of the evil spirits, so that their loved ones may be joyful in the happy hunting grounds. Upon the conclusion of the feast the lodge was taken down and the ghosts were left standing.

Remarkable Will Power.

Three stories were told in Boston over after-dinner cigars the other day, showing the power of man's will. One was of a young officer in the English army who was peculiarly stubborn and leastly the had been confined to his trascible. He had been confined to his bed after a severe attack of the heart and was unable to move. His physicians asked one of his fellow officers to warn him that he would never get out of bed again, that he might arrange his affairs before death. When the sick man was told what the doctor had said he arose in bed excitedly and said "I will never get up again, eh? I will walk to the doctor myseif and show him." He jumped to the floor, walked across the room and fell dead. The other was about a sheriff out west who, when arresting a man, was stabbed through the heart. He seized the man by the shoulders after the blade had struck him, pressed him to the ground, draw his revolver, and deliberately thrusting it down the struggling man's throat, pulled the trigger at the instant he himself died.

The third story was regarding anoththief. The man thought that he had given his pursuers the slip, but just as John A. BLAIR. he entered one door of a railroad car the officer appeared in the other. The thief instantly fired, the bullet penetrating bis persuer's brain. The officer returned the shot, bringing his man to the ground. He then dragged himself along the aisle of the of the car, firing as he crawled, until his revolver was empty. He was dead when he was picked up a second after he ceased to

Origin of Idaho.

From time to time something appears in the public prints connecting the name of Joaquin Miller with the origin of the word "Idaho" in which it is always claimed that the word in question resulted from an interview which Miller had with Colonel Craig while both were traveling through the Nez Perce country in the Summer of 1861. Miller is said to give Colonel Craig credit for composing the word from elements found in the Nez Perce language and which Craig is said to have first pronounced Idahe, applying the word to the appearance of a neighboring mountain, upon whose summit some thing was seen to glisten like a diamond or gem. This was no doubt the origin or the Miller-Craig gem of the mountains, but not of the genuine article nor the word "Idaho."

In the spring of 1860, several months before the discovery of gold had attracted the "poet of the Sierras" into the Nez Perce country, a steamboat was built at the upper cascades on the Columbia river under the auspices of the Oregon Steam Navigation Company; and when the steamer was launched the word Idaho appeared in its appropriate place as the name of the vessel. The definition of the word then given to the world was "gem of the mountains," and the word was then said to have been taken from the language of one of the Indian tribes inhabiting that portion of the Columbia river valley. Some efforts have been made to find out who it was that first suggested that name for the steamer, but thus far without success.

The steamer idaho plied upon the waters of the Columbia during the spring, summer and autumn of 1860, and its name was quite familiar to all who traveled through the country that year. When it became necessary to find a name for the new Territory, which was organized in March, 1863, somebody, probably Salucius Garfield, suggested the name of the old steamboat that had been long slace used up and relegated to the "bone yard."

The Cotton Worm.

That one drug house in Vicksburg should receive orders for fifteen tons, or 30,000 pounds, of paris green in one day demonstrates the extent of the apprehension felt by the cotton planters concerning the cotton worms in the large area of country tributary to or trading with that city. With the cotton worms so formidable in their second generation, the third generation, which forms a yast increase over its progenitors, may do very serious damage. It is extremely unfortunate, if it be true, that the available supply of paris green has been already exhausted. It is likely that far more than the amount already used will be needed for a month to come. Where these pests are unchecked by poison, in their third generation, they have been known to ravage cotton fields and leave the stalks as bare of foliage in the latter part of August and September as they are in early February before being pulled up and burned, preparatory to the planting of Eastern Beggars.

Beggary throughout the East is a thriving profession. There are guilds beggars, besides the numerous co communities of dervishes who are semireligious mendicants. Many families have been beggars for generations, and and are mendicants from choice. Some of these professional beggars are actuaily wealthy. Four and twenty years ago the writer well remembers a case, The Chief Beggar (the title was not conferred in derision) gave his daughter in marriage to a substantial farmer, The girl's dowry consisted of two freehold houses, the rooms of which were entirely filled with dry pieces of bread, and the sales of these begged crasts subsequently realized a considerable sum, being disposed of as food for cattle. It must be remembered that in the East there is no organized charity, that most Mussulmans are exceedingly charitable, many giving away a fifth and some even a third of their income. Under such circumstances it is not to be wondered at the professional beggar

Milk for Fattening Fowls.

The value of milk for laying hens has been frequently urged and now Poultry Yard calls attention to its use for fattening purposes. What a different taste a fine, nicely and quickly fatted fowl has, when served on the table, compared with one which has been forced to scratch for all its living, and then be consigned to the spit in anything but a fit condition for food. Farmers realize the importance of fattening quickly, when feeding beeves for the butcher, yet many do not seem to realize the fact that what holds good with that kind of meat is equally true when applied to fowls. Tenderness and juciness are results of fattening quickly, while mere ordinary flavor and want of tenderness result from letting fowls run until wanted for use on the

The Weight of the Whale.

Nilsson remarks that the weight of the great Greenland or right whale is 100 tons, or 220,000 pounds equal to that of eighty-eight elephants or 440 bears. The whalebone in such a whale may be taken at 3360 pounds and the oil at from 140 to 170 tons. The remains of the fosil whale which have been found in the coast of Ystad, in ST. FRANCIS' COLLEGE, the Baltic, and even far inland in Wangapanse, Westergothland betoken a whale which, although not more than between fifty and sixty feet in length, must at least have had a body twentyseven times larger and heavier than that of the common or right whale.

Exercise for Giris,

"What is the best form of exercise to a gir! ?" is a question frequently asked And there can be but one reply, "End exercise as will develop alike all por tions of the body." If one has a bol. low chest and round shoulders, the chest must be expanded and the july increased in size. If the arms and back are weak, these muscles much strengthened. Thus it is seen the there is no one "best form of exercise" To attempt to train a girl's mind by forcing her to follow a single line study, as Latin or mathematics, for the ample, would be no greater folly the to try to develop her physicially by the practice of a single form of exercise, he walking or swinging Indian clubs. Where one cannot visit a gymnasion regularly, it would be advisable that dozen or more ladies in a commune form a woman's athletic club, at app small gymnasium and employ a teacher for a few hours each day. The anal outlay will prove a far better invest ment in a very few months than it pot into mining stock or a scalakin char for the coming winter. The first thing to ascertain is the a. pacity of the lungs. How often do m draw a full breath? Can you, whe standing with the arms and handset. tended before you and after taking full inspiration, touch the knuckles b. hind the back without the tendescy; cough? Can you touch the back of the hands at all in this position t even make the elbows meet without at sistance ? Try it, not once, but often if you cannot accomplish it at in keep at it until it is accomplished, and you will soon find that you are not

Few ladies who "follow the fac. ions," or who consult the hundred and one fashion periodicals poured out into the press every mouth and every year, have any idea of the extreme simplicity of the patterns of female attire which were in vogue fifty and even forty year ago. It is sufficient to say that the bodice and the skirt of the dress wen generally in one piece ; that the gove fastened by books and eyes behind that the skirts were never "draped," and that their sole ornamentation was nothing but flounces,

The only practical way in which lady could show that she was in fr dress was to show a low necked dress and to bare her arms. Moreover, bodices were, when made low, universally cut horizontally instead of on the blas, and the female novelists of the last generation found unfailing mater. ial of fun in depicting the terments of growing girls at evening parties in their endeavors to prevent their low necked frocks from slipping off their shoulders. When a lady went to court she glorided herself with a train, a tall "panache" of plumes and as many diamends as fortune had favored her with ; otherwise the cut of her gown did not materially differ from that of the schoolgirl's low necked muslin freck.

Old Countries Prefer old Meg.

The older countries have a better appreciation of age than the United States. This is particularly in Germany. A man rarely receives credit for sagacity and ability over there who has not passed his sixtleth year. You Moltke, until his recent voluntary retirement on the approach of his nine tieth year, was the central figure of the greatest war office on earth. I have seen him in his eighty-eight year paging away as steadily at his desk at in most! ambitious of Lieutenants. B slept on a camp bedstead, ate two sun meals a day, and trudged sturdily int his palace to the war office at 8 o'clast every morning. He was not a figurbead, by any means. His erect figur was familiar in every department of the big building over which he presided Bismarck's age, though advanced I lost sight of in the sturdy and majetic personality of the man. Undoubtedly the superior age of the old Empara William, who rode a big horse and & rected an imperial review in his eightyninch year, made the Chancellor and Field Marshal of the German Empin feel like boys in comparison. But the do not seem to have grown old med since William's death.

Co-Education.

At a banquet of the University of Texas, which is so co-educational in a its departments, S. B. Maxey, er-Un ted States Senator, said To the female students I beg to saf that co-education of the sems is no longer an experiment. It is a proved success. The just revelations between the sexes are better understood than ever before in the world's history. Woman, without loosening her hold of that knightly respect and courtesy with which she has always been treated a our fayored land, has proven here! intellectually a formidable competit of that sex which in the very olden, dit tant time proclaimed man to be ill lord of humankind, Here, as elsewhere she has proven her right and shift to compete for honors. The moral india ence of co-education is great and bent ficial to both sexes. The attention paid to female education during the present century, and especialty in the last half of it, is a high evidence of advancing civilization. I glery in the civilinia which educates the girl equally elli the boy and gives employment woman equally with the man in all all tions for which by nature and education she is fitted.
