Medical Superstitions.
There is a popular supposition of wide range, based upon I know not what, that it is very harmful for children to play with dogs. A weak child, it is thought, may gain strength by being with a dog, or if diseased the child may be cured by having the animal "take the disease" - for example, inflamed eyes or any disorder of the skin. Within a year a college graduate told me, in perfect good faith, of acquaintances, a Boston doctor and his wife, whose little girl had been greatly afflicted with some form of eczema which they all hoped would disappear, as the parents had purchased a fine dog to play with the child.

When a dog is teething the upper incisors, according to a New England superstition, must be removed as soon as they become loose, or he may "swallow them and have fits." Perhaps even more generally received is the fancied danger of allowing a child's milk teeth to be extracted to fall into the possession of a dog or cat, lest the animal swallow it, and the child have a dog's or cat's teeth grow in place of the lost one. The Mexicans and Indians in Texas says that every animal has brains enough to tan its own skin; and so the latter, in the case of a wild panther, wild cat and some other animals, is mainly prepared by rubbing into the flesh side of its brains of its former wearer.

A somewhat common fancy among children, perhaps, too, among adults as well, is that "every part strengthens a part" - that is, that the liver, heart, lungs and so on of animals when eaten go directly toward nourishing the corresponding organs in the eater. A similar doctrine was worked out in great detail by American Indians, and, I believe, held by many savage tribes. It seems altogether probable that such beliefs, wherever found among civilized people, old or young, are survivals from remote antiquity and that they are closely akin in their nature and origin to the well known doctrine of signatures which has played so great a part in the systems of medicine of primitive peoples.

The Indian's Three Cuds of Coca.
The laborer of Bolivia are universally Indians, and all employers furnish a certain amount of coca to each man or he will not work at all. In the mines the least allowance per diem is five ounces for every man and eight ounces is sometimes given. Thus supplied an Indian works willingly and well from 4 o'clock in the morning until 7 P. M., taking nothing to eat in the meantime. He generally has food of some sort before beginning his labor, and after 7 in the evening he eats whatever he can get.

His first cud is accumulated about two hours, from four to six o'clock, taking it leaf by leaf, stripping the central stem between his teeth, and from time to time adding a few grains of potash. This alkali causes a burning sensation on the lips, but is soon incorporated with the cud, serving to neutralize the acidity of the leaves and at the same time aiding digestion by provoking an increased flow of saliva.

At 10 o'clock A. M. the employer gives him an hour of rest. He then throws away the morning's chew, rinses his mouth with alcohol, and industriously begins the accumulation of a second cud.

Again, at 1:30 o'clock, another rest is given, which the laborer employs in making a third cud. At 3:30 the performance is repeated.

He still has a little coca left for the evening, and if the day's allowance has been generous enough he will keep himself awake and garrulous all night. Many Indians get credit against coming wages for a greater amount of coca than the employer feels disposed to furnish gratis, and if they can add to it some forty per cent. of alcohol their bliss is complete.

Changes in the "Big Dipper"
One of the most notable examples of the constant and yet almost imperceptible changes taking place in the heavens is to be found in the motion of the seven bright stars collectively known as the Big Dipper. Huggins, the noted astronomer, is now engaged in proving that life of these stars are moving in the same direction, while the other two are moving in a direction directly opposite. Professor Flammarion has reproduced Huggins's calculations to a system, arranging them upon charts. These ingeniously constructed heavenly outlines show that 100,000 years ago the "Dipper" stars were arranged in the outline of a large and irregular shaped cross, and that 100,000 years hence they will have assumed the form of an elongated diamond, stretching over an area four times the extent of sky now occupied.

Submarine Vessels.
The great difficulty in submarine propulsion is the obtaining of some propelling agent that can be used beneath the water. Hand-power was first tried, and later compressed air and carbonic acid have been employed. For automatic torpedoes, such as the Whitehead or Lay, the two latter agents are fairly successful, but the amount of energy that can be practically stored by either means is too small to be of use in a real submarine boat.

The history of the submarine navigation is the history of disaster. There are stories of partial successes, but the sequel is usually tragic. A successful submarine boat is said to have been made by a Chicago shoemaker, who was in the habit of going out in it and spending his afternoons in the bottom of the lake. One evening he failed to return, and as he had not communicated the plans of his boat to any one, his experience is lost to us.

The experienced farmer can make a reasonable estimate of the value of land after a short examination of it. He observes carefully certain signs which indicate fertility or barrenness of soil.

Good soil should be from twelve to eighteen inches deep. A clearly cut furrow, or a footprint made when the soil is moist, which shows clear, sharp edges and the nail marks, indicates tenacity, a necessary quality in productive soil. In loamy soil the footprint is indistinct - the edges crumble away.

Certain wild grasses show barrenness. Grass land which seems covered with dead, unkept turf, like badly made hay, is always barren. The state of the crops should be observed also, though that may indicate more as to the character of the farming than the quality of the land.

WHISTLING NUANCES.
Down on State Street yesterday afternoon a well-dressed merchant stopped a young man and asked him to play a tune on his violin. The young man played a few notes and the merchant said: "That is a very nice tune. I have never heard it before. Can you play any other tunes?"

When I was a young man, I was very fond of whistling. I would whistle all day long, and I would whistle all night long. I would whistle all the time, and I would whistle all the time. I would whistle all the time, and I would whistle all the time.
