but thought he got it at the railroad ; and that he did not remember of telling Nagle he was going to drag the body into the woods to hide it.

Attorney McNellis argued the prisoner's side of the case to the jury and District Attorney O'Connor, the Commonwealth's. After Judge Johnston had delivered his charge, the jury retired to their room and after an absence of fifty minutes returned with a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. After the yerdict was announced the counsel for the prisoner requested the Court to have the jury polled which was accordingly done, each juror as his name was called and on being asked how he found answered "guilty in the first degree." The announcement of the verdict had no visible effect on Marsh, not a muscle in his face moved, and he seemed to be indifferent, to the fearful dilems that the finding of a verdict of murder in the first degree placed him in.
