AFTER FORTY YEARS.

A Singular Meeting on Board a Lake Propeller. "It was in the fall of '47 that three young fellows left Rochester for the West, determined to hew out their fortunes, or perish in the attempt."

"Well, as before said, I am one of the three, and am now on my way to Rochester, in fulfillment of the agreement made in 1847."

"The old gentleman moved himself into a more comfortable position, while young Evans edged himself a little closer to the group."

"Well, I struck straight north. Took a boat for Mackinac, and from there drifted to Green Bay, Wis. There was a young fellow named Evans, who had some good land, and by wiggling around I managed to get hold of some of it."

"I then went West again, picked up my family, and struck into the grazing district of Montana. I bought a few head of cattle first, and by and by I have been able to see these multiply, until now I have one of the largest and most successful cattle ranches in that section of country."

"Such is, briefly, my life, and what it has done; and you don't know how anxious I am to start on the other two young men—for I can only see them as a young man—and to know the result of their forty-years' struggle."

"What's that?" exclaimed the old-timer, exhibiting some surprise. "You don't mean to say that you are the son of one of those two lost ones—one of the two associated with me in that freak of forty years ago?"

"My father is dead," began the young man.

THE SMALL BOYS BEHIND.

The big procession marches, and here, and boom and beat, and drum, and one applause, through the shouting street.

WHERE WAS MR. BLANK?

His Absence Causes His Wife Much Trouble.

"Where is Mr. Blank and who is he?" queried this busybody.

"I do hope you will like Mrs. B.," he said. "He is in Auburn with that poor wretch Kemmer, I believe."

"How is Mrs. Blank?" she queried.

General Sherman's widow.

FIRING AN ENGINE.

Some of the Hardships of a Locomotive Fireman's Life.

His Lot is Not as Easy as Many Believe.

"An ordinary fire is four or five scopsels, and it must be put in the fire box just as there will be trouble."

"Naturally," said the young man, dryly.

"Look here; you don't deserve an explanation, but I'll give you one. My business is to see things and to write about them."

A DREADFUL CHILD.

Asleep It's All Right, but Awake It Becomes a Kiltion.

An elderly tale, worthy of the darkest and painfulest days of the middle ages, comes from the little hamlet of Pompano, up in Columbia County, where a child is said to have been born of late which defies competition.

As has already been remarked, the Columbia County child, when asleep, is at rest, seems, even to the female eye, and heart, to be nothing but a baby.

When, rising from its slumbers, it opens its bright eyes upon the world, it neither lies still nor begins to wail like an ordinary infant of its age.
