IN A ROMAN CONVENT.

The Life of Monks and Lay-Brothers described by Dr. P. M. ... The lay-brother appeared at day-break, and told me that in fifteen minutes I was to join the Italians in retreat...

At our coffee we were dismissed to our chambers for an hour, and then listened to another sermon in the chapel. This consumed the morning till eleven o'clock, when a bell rang for dinner...

At the head of the tables stood the Superior, who was General of the whole order, a tall, portly, kindly man, with a stern and austere countenance. The monks, motionless and in dead silence, stood ranged on right and left, resting on the breast the badge of their order—a heart surmounted by a cross. Their harsh, cadaverous faces bespoke the rigor of their discipline, which is extremely severe.

When I had got to my chamber and was refreshing myself with the Pious Father's book, I was converted to me. "My father," said I, "I am afraid your kindness will be thrown away."

There was an amusing vivacity in his mind, and a most different and brilliant solemnity when at dinner. In the course of his talk, which was rambling, though flows, he kept offering me his views on the world, and his views on the world, and his views on the world...

After the sermon the laymen were turned out to walk for a while in the convent garden, attended by Padre Leo. I was not a little surprised to find the Passionist brotherhood, but a secular priest, and his pleasant, plump, good humored countenance contrasted with the sternness of the monks.

It seems as if measures ought to be taken to put an end to promiscuous visiting, in regard to which there is evidence to differ. I was asked by the correspondent of the Country Gentleman. In these days of incompetent servants and anxious housekeepers, it is not a pleasant thing to have a visitor who is not a member of the household.

One of the most hospitable of hospitable Westerners said that he gave up his home and endured a boarding-house, because he was "tired of keeping a hotel." Another gentleman declared that he would put a small-pox notice on his house if it would keep away undesired visitors.

There is a good deal of difference between theory and practice, but no man can be a success without a sprinkling of both. Theory is the scaffold on which the laborer stands. It is the line which makes out the work, but without practice the edifice would not be reared, the work would not be done.
