SWEDISH SOVEREIGNS.

King Oscar a Superb Specimen of Manhood.

A Queen Who Was Compelled to Do the Work of a Menial in Order to Preserve Her Health—Gigantic Princes.

The most talented monarch on any European throne at the present moment is undoubtedly King Oscar of Sweden, says a writer in the New York Recorder. Unlike the ex-emperor of Brazil, whose knowledge, although embracing a vast amount of different subjects, is of the most superficial nature, that of his Swedish majesty is of a far more serious and profound character. He is a singularly graceful poet and has written quite a number of plays which have been staged with considerable success in Germany and Austria. Astronomy, ethnography and psychology are among the sciences to which he devotes much of his time and intellect, and he finds relaxation in playing upon the organ, an instrument on which he is a past master.

Nor shall I forget the exquisite melody which pealed forth from the organ loft of an old Norwegian church of the fourteenth century, situated in the grounds of the country seat of the king near Christinia. He sat up there and played to us for almost a full hour, after which he took us to a quaint old peasant cottage such as they have up in the wilds of Telemarken and treated us to a typical Norwegian peasant repast. On a long table were spread flat bread, goats' cheese and all the delicacies of the Norwegian cuisine. His majesty then seated himself at the table and, taking the huge loving cup, which was filled with mead, drank to the health of his guests, kissed the hand of his fair neighbor on his right and then passed the cup to her.

Although far more of a student than a soldier, the king of Sweden and Norway does not possess in any way that peculiar appearance which we are wont to associate with the possession of much brandaxe. He towers head and shoulders above every other monarch in Europe, being taller than the czar, and, unlike the latter, is magnificently proportioned, without one ounce of superfluous tissue upon his body. He is indeed a superb specimen of the stronger sex and a worthy incumbent of the throne of the ancient vikings who ruled Scandinavia. He bears himself with wonderful dignity and majesty, and presents the most striking contrast to Emperor William of Germany that it is possible to conceive. For the latter is the very impersonification of restlessness and seems forever in a hurry, which although permissible on the part of an ordinary individual becomes maldroited in the ruler of forty millions of people.

King Oscar's wife but rarely appears at the entertainments which he gives, for she is a confirmed invalid, her ailments being of a nervous character. Indeed, for a time her mind was affected and her physicians were forced to adopt all kinds of devices in order to check the course of her malady. Thus, for a time they insisted that she should perform all kinds of hard and menial labor, such as sweeping, scrubbing, washing and dusting, their object being to counteract by bodily fatigue the abnormal and unhealthy excitement of her nerves. Like all empresses of Austria, Empress Elizabeth and several other royal and imperial ladies, she is a patient of the famous Dutch specialist, Dr. Metzger, and spends a number of weeks each year at his sanitarium.

The sons of King Oscar, although every one of them giants in stature, their average height being six feet three, are far from possessing the magnificent constitution and physique of their father. They are extremely short-sighted, and the eldest two, at any rate, are afflicted with what is known as barrel teeth, which renders necessary constant attention on the part of their American dentist Dr. Evans of Paris.

NATURAL TELEPHONE LINE.

Remarkable Discovery Made by an Exploring Party in South Dakota.

There appears to be a natural telephone line between two mountains in the Black Hills range. On each side of an intervening valley twelve miles in width stand two high peaks which tower above the other mountains and have long been known as landmarks, being called the twin peaks. These mountains are fully ten thousand feet above the range. Only on rare occasions have these peaks been ascended, and little was known of their topography. Some weeks ago a party of tourists determined to make the ascent, and, forming into two parties, one for each peak, they took apparatus for signaling and expected to have pleasure and amusement by flashing the heliograph code across the intervening space, to the mystification of the people of the valley. The ascent was made, and while the people were making arrangements to signal across one of the party on the north mountain was surprised to hear voices which apparently came from the air. He moved about and the sound was no longer heard. By changing his position several times he discovered that at a certain spot on the mountain he could hear the voices, and it was not long before he found that they proceeded from the party on the other mountain. He called the attention of the others to the phenomena and then they attracted the notice of the party on the south mountain and found that a conversation in an ordinary tone of voice was plainly heard from one mountain to another. There was only one place on each mountain where it could be heard, and it appeared to be a natural telephone. No shouting was necessary, and the words were perfectly distinct.

The Mystery of Mark Island.

Mark island, the ledge off Small point, where a schooner was wrecked the other day, says the Lewiston (Me.) Journal, was the home for two or three years of a mysterious family. The cottage there was erected five or six years ago by a man who came with a fine yacht, his wife and a mulatto boy and took possession. They made friends with no one and never allowed anybody to land on the island unless some one broke an oar or was shipwrecked. There is only one place where a landing can be made, and from its beach a path leads to the house. At this path, at a point which commanded a full view of the landing, the mulatto boy stood from daylight till dark with a musket on his shoulder. Two or three years this strange family spent on the island, and then one spring they did not come, nor have they been seen or heard from since. But three years ago this fall a man was arrested in either Boston or New York for passing counterfeit money who answered to the description of the one who lived on Mark island. No attempt was made to find his workshop, but some folks think this was the place.

What Your Great Grandmother Did.

She hetcheled the flax and carded the wool, and wove the linen, and spun the tow, and made the clothes for her husband and children. She made butter and cheese, and dipped tallow candles, to light the house at night, and she cooked all the food for her household by an open fire place and a brick oven. Yes; and when she was forty years of age, she was already an old lady whose best days were over. Her shoulders were bent and her joints enlarged by hard work, and she wore spectacles and a cap.

Her great granddaughter, with all the modern conveniences for comfort, refinement and luxury, may be as charming and attractive at forty-five as at twenty. Especially is this true if she preserves her health by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which wards off all female ailments and irregularities, cures them if they already exist, keeps the life current healthful and vigorous, and enables the woman of middle age to retain the freshness of girlhood upon brow and cheek, the light of youth in her eyes, and its elasticity in her step.

Go to your drug store, pay a dollar, get a bottle and try it—try a second, a third if necessary. Before the third one's been taken you'll know that there's a remedy to help you. Then you'll keep on and a cure'll come.

But if you shouldn't feel the help, should be disappointed in the results—you'll find a guarantee printed on the bottle-wrapper that'll get your money back for you.

A FORGOTTEN CABLE PROJECT.

The Siberian Route Contemplated Before the Success of the Atlantic Cable.

In these days when cables between America and Europe are in such constant use, says the Electrical Review, most people have forgotten a great enterprise for securing telegraphic communication with Europe by way of Behring strait and Siberia. Cyrus Field had just made an attempt to lay another cable across the Atlantic with the Great Eastern, but the cable had snapped in mid-ocean. Many capitalists, believing that Field's idea could never be realized, formed a company to extend a telegraph line from San Francisco up the coast to Behring strait, run a cable across to Siberia, and then connect with the telegraph systems of the old world. A large construction fleet began work at Puget sound, with the steamship George S. Wright as flagship. The Fremont, Milton, Badger, Palmetto, Nightingale, Jennie Pitto, Egmont and others brought up supplies from San Francisco. R. R. Haines, the superintendent of construction, had a big force of men organized and uniformed like an army. The line from San Francisco to New Westminster, in British Columbia, was owned by the California State Telegraph Company, and beyond that it was known as the Collins Overland and Western Union Extension. The line followed the east shore of the sound to New Westminster, and some of the original poles can yet be seen sticking in the mud. The work was carried eight hundred miles north of Westminster to Skeena, when the complete success of the Atlantic cabel suddenly put a stop to construction. The army of men was mustered out, and the materials that could be recovered were taken away. Thousands of tons of wire and material distributed along the line through the woods of British Columbia remain there to this day. Several years afterward a party of woodmen took to Port Townsend a cargo of the wire and offered it for sale, but the creditors of the company seized it immediately. The Seabeck mills sawed out thousands of the poles for the line, which were piled up on the mill wharf, and lay there until burned with the mill a few years ago. The captain of the ship Egmont, which lay in Esquimalt with a cargo of submarine cable, got drunk and ran off with the ship's papers. The vessel lay in the harbor for two years unable to clear. Her owners finally patched up Hawaiian papers for her and she sailed away. George H. Munford, afterward vice president of the Western Union, came out in 1872 and wound up the affairs of the company, paying every bill in full. The American end of the line was absorbed by the Western Union, and the extension to Skeena was operated for a few years and then abandoned.

A MATRIMONIAL CLUB.

Wealthy Austrians Form an Association for the Marriage of Poor Girls.

In these days of mercenary marriages, when the lords of creation, even more than the weaker sex, are usually anxious to make a good match, not from the point of view of sweetness of disposition or beauty, which are apt to weigh very light in the scales of decision when placed in the balance with money, it is more than refreshing, it is idyllic—to read the account of a club lately started in Austria. The chivalrous feelings of the members of the Marichilf Matrimonial club raise them so far above the majority of their sex that it is difficult to believe in the actual existence of the club, about which, however, I believe there is no doubt, says a London letter from a woman to the Philadelphia Telegraph. The members of the club are all rich men, and each has pledged himself to marry a poor girl. For the sake of these noble beings, animated with such unselfish desires, I can only hope that the secret of membership is devoutly kept. I am very unwilling to disparage my own sex, yet we often hear of, and even see, the matchmaking mother on the warpath. Can we blame her for her maternal instincts? While the maiden who has a very keen eye to the main chance, in the matter of her matrimonial alliance, is not unknown. I fear for the peace of mind of these noble-minded men. Their riches alone would be a strong bait to the penniless maids and their scheming mothers; while if the fact of their vow was known I should imagine the candidate would be very fierce. In case, however, the members find the attentions of portionless girls and widows too overpowering, they have provided themselves with loopholes of escape; for should the damsel of their choice be blessed with an abundance of this world's goods they may redeem their oaths on payment of four hundred pounds sterling. A further feature of the club is to provide deserving but impecunious couples who, after long engagements, have still no prospect of setting up house with a start in life. Of course, the forfeitures are devoted to this purpose, and thus two pairs of loving hearts are made happy. I am really inclined to believe that the sterner sex in Austria are a superior set of mortals to those who inhabit the rest of the world, for I feel quite convinced that none of our finde siecle young men who adorn London society are capable of founding a similar club.

THE JOURNALS OF CANADA.

A Pleasant Summary of Canadian Newspapers by a Canadian Writer.

The generality of Canadian newspapers in their style, says Walter Blackburn Harte, a Canadian journalist, in the New England Magazine, are a curious mixture of English and American methods. In the news department they are very similar to the newspapers in the smaller American cities, and in the editorial columns they are modeled after the English provincial papers. Except in one or two instances, they are destitute of all pretentions to literary excellence. The Toronto Mail and Globe maintain a higher standard than any of their contemporaries. The Gazette of Montreal and the Empire of Toronto are almost exclusively political in their scope, and exist as the organs of the conservative party. The western papers have little room for anything outside of news and politics. The Montreal Star is always on the popular side of every question. The Ottawa papers, like those of Washington, carry little weight and are miserable in every particular. The French Canadian newspapers are less enterprising and energetic in the gathering of news than the English, but their editorial columns are usually more striking in a literary way.

A Gigantic Clock.

The tower of a public building at Philadelphia is to be provided with a clock, which, for size alone, will be one of the marvels of the world. The center of the dial (twenty-five feet in diameter) will be three hundred and fifty-one feet above the street. The bell is to weigh between twenty and twenty-five thousand pounds and will be second in weight to the great Montreal cathedral bell, which weighs twenty-eight thousand pounds, and it is calculated that its peal will be heard even to the most distant part of the city. Chimes similar to those of Westminster will be used, ringing at the quarter, half, three-quarters and hour. The minute hand is to be twelve and the hour hand nine feet in length, while the Roman figures in the dial will measure two feet eight inches in length.

WILD HORSES.

Noble Animals Left to Themselves Will Degenerate Into Ponies.

Many years ago a ship laden with Spanish horses went ashore on the sands of Chincoteague island, on the eastern shore of Virginia, says the Rider and Driver. No man knows when the ship went ashore or what port it sailed from or how many horses were saved. It is known, however, that on the extreme edge of Chincoteague island a ship bearing a cargo of horses to the new world from some port in Spain ended its voyage in a terrific storm, and that some of the horses found their way through the breakers to the barren waste of sand. These horses must have been of a high order of breed, for, though scores of years of privation and exposure have passed over his head, the wild horse of this inhospitable and barren region is a most remarkable animal. He is smaller today than his Spanish prototype, and lack of care and exposure to the storms of this tempest-swept island has reduced the original horse to a rough, shaggy pony, yet all the years of degeneracy and vicissitude have not shorn him of his evidences of blood—his beauty, his intelligence and his fleetness. The severity of the climate, the want of strengthening, nutritious food, have made their influence felt, not upon the spirit, but upon the body, of the eastaway horse. Many of these ponies have been captured by the inhabitants of the region adjacent to the mainland and put to use, although the breaking and training of them is in some instances a very serious job. The effect of years of unrestrained freedom upon his high-mettled blood has made the island horse way ward and jealous of his liberty. It usually requires the united strength of four men to subdue the young horse. Notwithstanding, they are frequently conquered and tied down to the drudgery of farm work or may be seen pulling the clam carts of Chincoteague fishermen along the shell roads of the Virginia or Maryland coast. It is certain that inbreeding and starvation, together with the rigors of a changeable climate, have had their effects in deteriorating this race of horses.

With the first settlement of Australia by Europeans horses were introduced, some of these escaped from control and soon reverted to the wild state. They are multiplied and deteriorated in that sparsely peopled continent until they are as numerous as jack rabbits and as useless. They became such a nuisance that seven thousand of them were shot at one station in New South Wales. In nearly every country where the once unestimated horse has run wild he has deteriorated. He has dwindled into a pony in Iceland and Shetland, Corsica and Sardinia, the mountainous regions of northern Europe, and the Cordilleras of America. There has a miniature horse originated during and since the war in the prairies along the gulf coast from Mobile to the western limit of Louisiana. Many planters during the war allowed their thoroughbred mares to escape, and breeding in the wild state with the natives the size has gradually diminished until many of them do not reach thirteen hands, and few of them go over that.

SOCIAL SUCCESS.

A Woman Who Wishes to Be Agreeable Must Listen, Not Talk.

A woman to be most agreeable must listen, says Kate Field. Keep a man wound up. Look as though you were hanging on his lips and he'll think you charming. For my part I like to listen. It's a great deal better fun to make others talk than to talk one's self. The listener never makes a fool of herself, because she says nothing. She cannot make enemies by the expression of opinion, for she expresses none. She learns a deal about other people, and nobody learns anything about her. She gives no offense by egotistic assertion. The talkers call her sympathetic because she has allowed all to have their own way. I don't say that a woman should everlastingly hold her tongue—there are men who insist upon an interchange of ideas; but it is always safe to start a man upon the subject of himself. Nine times out of ten you will reach the responsive chord and be entertained, as everybody can talk well on what is nearest the heart.

"You've made an impression on Mr. Randall," said Bob, this morning. "He thinks you remarkably intelligent. What did you say to him?"

"Nothing," I replied. "I asked an occasional question and listened. He talked about himself."

A woman may serve up wit or epigram as an entremets, and be liked; but I'm convinced that a woman who monopolizes conversation is doomed to be hated. Woman in society is to be, man is to do. Beyond all other horrors are the shop-talking horrors. A woman may translate Homer, write Romola, edit a newspaper, conduct important business, or act Lady Macbeth, but she must forget herself if she wants to be welcome in society. In fact, if a woman is not born unselfish let her assume the noblest of all virtues, and, provided she dresses well, she will be admired.

A MOTHER'S LOVE.

With a Breaking Heart She Reads Her Daughter's Funeral Service.

There was a simple funeral at Oakwoods cemetery on a recent Sunday, says the Chicago Tribune. No priest or minister was there to read the burial service—only a heart-broken mother who saw her only daughter go to her grave, while a man who had been a stranger to both and the undertaker watched the silent grief as the coffin was hidden under the clay.

Unfortunate Mamie Jennings, whose body was taken from the lake off Hyde Park Thanksgiving day, would have gone to a pauper's grave but for the kindness of J. P. Luby, an operator on the board of trade, who read the story of the suicide and himself arranged for a respectable, Christian burial. The mother of the girl is without money and, but for the aid of Mr. Luby, who had known neither, the girl would have been buried by the county.

Mrs. Jennings claimed to have asked Kendal Street Christian church, where the girl attended services, to send a minister to conduct the funeral. There was no minister present, however, and the mother, rather than see her daughter buried without religious observance, stood beside the coffin of her daughter and read a portion of the eleventh chapter of the Gospel of St. John: "For I am the resurrection and the life." She read and there came a solemn amen from the two who looked on in reverent silence.

Snow had covered the mounds of earth about the new made grave and headstones were half hidden by the mantle of white. Near by, a long line of carriages wound in and out among the leafless trees, following the hearse containing the remains of a daughter whose life had been passed in the midst of riches and of luxury. Above her grave were heaped beautiful wreaths of flowers until the dark clay was hidden and sorrowing friends stood by and sought to soften the grief of mother and father.

At the other grave the mother gave one look across the snow and then placed a little bunch of faded forget-me-nots on the grave of her child and turned to where the one carriage stood. There were no tears in her eyes, and as she gave a last look at the mound and the poor offering of flowers she said: "Thy will be done."

A Queer Transaction Between a Husband and Lover.

An Incident Which Illustrates the Force of the Old Saying That Truth Is Stranger Than Fiction—A Romantic Story.

The details of one of the most unique bargains ever consummated in any part of the country have just come to light through the filing for record of a deed of a tract of land in the western part of the country. The deed, in the Fort Worth Gazette, is from Christiansen to Nils Jensen, and is for eighty acres of farm land in the county, but the remarkable part of the deed is the consideration given for the land.

It reads as follows:

"For and in consideration of one woman to wife. The wife of Nils Jensen."

The queer document carries out well what is to be made out of the life of a remarkable story was learned by
