It is the mucus membrane, that wonderful semifuld envelope surrounding the delicate tissues of the air and load passages, that Catarrh makes its stronghold. Once established it eals into the vitals and renders a life a long drawn breath of misery and disease, duiling the sense of hearing, trammeling the power of speech, destroying the faculty of smell, tatiting the breath and killing the refined pleasures of taste. Insidiously, by creeping on from a simple cold in the head. It assaults the membraneous lining and and envelopes tae bonce, cating the delicate coast and crusing inflammation, sloughing and death.
Nothing short of total eradication will secure itemply procra-tinated sufferings, leading to a fatal termination. Even when the disease has made trightful inroads on fellente constitutions, hearing, smell and faste have been recovered and the disease thoroughly driven out.
